Henry N. Cary, Noted in Newspaper Field, Dies

Former New York Editor Is Victim of Pneumonia at His Home in Chicago

CHICAGO, Nov. 23.—Henry N. Cary, nationally known as a newspaper man and general manager of the Chicago Newspaper Publishers' Association, died here to-night. He was formerly connected with "The New York World," "The Detroit Free Press" and "The St. Louis Republic."

Mr. Cary had been ill for the last three weeks, but his condition was not considered serious until pneumonia developed several days ago. Since then his family has been at his bedside almost constantly.

His death took place at 8:30 o'clock to-night. He is survived by his wife and two children.

Mr. Cary was born in Racine, Wis., in 1854. He learned the printer's trade on "The Journal" of La Crosse, Kan., later going to Milwaukee, where he became a reporter and then managing editor of "The Milwaukee Sentinel."

Later he was editor of "The Chicago Times," general Western manager of the New York Associated Press, managing editor of "The New York Times," editor of "The St. Louis Post-Dispatch," in charge of the field staff of "The New York World" in Cuba during the Spanish-American War, publisher of "The Verdict," New York, managing editor of "The New York World-Telegram," general manager of "The Detroit Free Press" and general manager of "The St. Louis Republic."

Mr. Cary had been general manager of the Chicago Newspaper Publishers' Association since 1911.

ARCHIBALD W. INGLIS MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Nov. 23.—Archibald W. Inglis, 56 years old, chief of the Middletown police force, died suddenly at his home today of heart trouble. He formerly was president of the State Police Association and was a delegate to national conventions in recent years.

HARRY S. DICKEY YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, Nov. 23.—Harry S. Dickey, sixty-two years old, formerly an attaché of the United States Diplomatic Corps, died at his home here today. During the first World Administration Mr. Dickey represented the State Department on a mission to Santo Domingo. He formerly lived in South Bend, Ind.

JAMES WINTHINGTON GARNEAU ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 23.—James Wintington Garneau, formerly president of the American Meat Packers' Association, died at his home here today. He was sixty-four years old and was interested in the St. Louis Browns baseball club.

JAMES MCSCKER James McCosker, who had been treasurer of Lord & Taylor for thirty-five years when he retired in 1912, and had been connected with the firm for twenty years, died yesterday at his home, 1924 University Avenue, in the Bronx. He was born in Ireland eighty-four years ago and came to this country when twelve years old.

MRS. ABBY L. BUNNER Mrs. Abby L. Bunner, mother of Albert D. Bunner, Deputy United States Marshal, and a descendant of an old New England family, died yesterday at her home on the Alentine estate, Eastchester Road and Pelham Parkway, in the Bronx. She is survived by her son and daughter, and two grand-children. Funeral services will be held at her home to-morrow night.

Young Boswell Interviews Lillian Gish

BECAUSE she is the tragedienne of motion pictures, she best understands the pushed-off, under-privileged woman, struggling and her beauty is fragile and her emotional appeal subtle.

"Broken Blossoms," though a tragedy, was the finest film, artistically, yet produced.

she has created a "movie" technique apart from the stage technique, she has sailed for Italy to produce a masterpiece.

The entire passenger list of the Providence followed LILLIAN GISH to the boat dock, where photographers swarmed to snap her while she checked her trunk, which had already been checked, and said premature good-bys to her sister Dorothy and Mary Pickford, who had come to see her off.

"She really is lovely looking," remarked one lady through her lorgnette. "And those orchids are just the right flowers for her." "I like that gray suit with the fur collar," commented her daughter. "And, mother, I want a little black hat like hers, with a lace veil."

Young Boswell drew MISS GISH away from the photographers to a quiet corner behind a bow ventilator.

Young Boswell—What are you going to do in Italy? LILLIAN GISH—We are going over to do "The White Sister," by Marion Crawford.

Young Boswell—Oh, yes. I drove out to his villa in Sorrento. Beautiful view of the Bay of Naples from there.

LILLIAN GISH—You know he wrote perfect continuity. He built his stories up to the sort of climax which the scenario has to have. He used our technique. My only regret is that he never got to see his work produced.

"The White Sister" is set in Naples and Rome, and we are going to do several scenes on the island of Capri. I hope it will be a good picture. It's a tragedy like "Broken Blossoms."

A belated photographer pushed Young Boswell aside, to run off a few feet of film for the weeklies.

Young Boswell—Don't you ever get tired of being photographed? LILLIAN GISH—No, I really love it. Did you see "Hamlet" last night? Young Boswell—I couldn't get in.

LILLIAN GISH—Well, one of the critics called John Barrymore the best Hamlet of this generation. I can't imagine a better Hamlet of any generation. It was an extraordinary performance. I hope it is still running when I come back. I should like to see it again. I'm coming back in about four months.

"And then the foghorn blew a deep note. LILLIAN GISH turned to her sister Dorothy, and began to cry. Mary Pickford tried to comfort her.

LILLIAN GISH—I really ought to be happy going abroad. I was when I went over before, during the war.

"She looked out into the mist settling over the harbor, veiling the passing tug and ferries, and the gray water below. "I guess it must be the gloomy day," she said. "The white steam again. 'Good by, Dorothy; good by, Mary. Good by, Young Boswell.'"

"When Young Boswell was wandering toward the nearest subway he thought of being the next to come to the large and luxurious and decorated like a florist, as one would expect—and of what she had said when asked to explain the pushed-off woman, struggling and defeated and trying to make good. "We are all Saint Peter in our minds," he thought. "Young Boswell as he dropped his ticket in the slot, 'she isn't a typical movie actress. She is a very real person, a sincere artist.'"

Baron Sonnino, Twice Premier Of Italy, Dies

Stroke of Apoplexy Quickly Followed by Death of Veteran Diplomat; Served as Foreign Minister in War

ROME, Nov. 23. (By The Associated Press.)—Baron Sonnino, twice Prime Minister of Italy and Foreign Minister during the great war, died to-night. He had suffered a stroke of apoplexy earlier in the day.

Great concern was expressed in political circles at Baron Sonnino's condition as death neared, and also among the general public, with whom he has always enjoyed popular favor.

King Victor Emmanuel seemed to feel his death keenly. Signor Tittoni, President of the Senate, who was out of the city, returned immediately and hastened to the bedside of his friend.

The stroke came as a complete surprise, the Baron having enjoyed excellent health all along, showing no symptoms to indicate the approach of a breakdown. On Monday he attended a session of the Senate, appearing in splendid spirits, and on Tuesday, although the sittings had been suspended, he went to the Senate Chamber and conversed at length and with animation with a number of his colleagues. Later he was seen walking the streets with his customary light and almost youthful step.

Pilgrimage to His Beside. When the announcement of Baron Sonnino's grave condition was made to government circles and to the Chamber, the Senate and the Prefecture, a veritable pilgrimage began to the Baron's home, a succession of Italy's most notable political personages driving to his residence. The first callers were Signor Colonna di Cesaro, the Minister of Posts, who is his nephew, and Count Teofilo Rossi, Minister of Industry, dean of the present cabinet. Both remained at his bedside.

"The silent statesman" of Italy, Sidney Sonnino, was of cosmopolitan origin. His grandfather was a Jew, of Leghorn, who migrated thence to Egypt and amassed a large fortune as a banker. The son of this Italian Jew married a Protestant faith, and on Tuesday, Prime Minister of Italy was born.

According to some at Florence, to others at Pisa, and to yet others at Cairo, on March 11, 1847. The boy had all the educational and other advantages that wealth could secure, and spent many profitable years in study, in England and at the University of Pisa. On leaving college he was engaged in the diplomatic service at Madrid, Vienna, Berlin and Paris from 1867 to 1872, and then devoted himself to literature and journalism. He was the editor of the magazine "Rassegna," which he founded and in which he set forth his political and economic views. Later he was one of the proprietors of the "Giornale d'Italia," in which he found and affectionate student and lecturer much about them and their work.

The chief ambition of his life seemed to be to improve the condition of the Italian peasantry, and to that end he devoted much time, labor and money. He wrote a volume entitled "Contadini in Sicilia," which was the most important contribution ever made to public knowledge of agrarian conditions in that part of the kingdom. Both in Sicily and in Naples and elsewhere in southern Italy he organized agricultural banks and credit, built railroads to publicize regions in touch with markets, built schools and libraries and in every possible manner strove for the rehabilitation of the country, materially and morally.

He entered the Italian Parliament in 1880, and from the beginning was one of the hardest working men in that body.

He did not shine. I do not glitter," he said one day in debate. "I leave that to my political foes. I am content if I can reveal an occasional gleam of common sense." So he was "silent in the lower house."

He was a member of the Ministry of Finance and Minister of the Treasury in Crispien's Cabinet from 1893 to 1896, he rehabilitated the finances of Italy and established upon a sure foundation. He was a rigorous economist, who restored the foreign credit of Italy by reducing the national debt. To do this he reduced salaries and other expenses, dismissed unnecessary employes and improved the tax system. Incidentally he himself always practiced personal simplicity and economy to the point of abstemiousness.

Foreign Minister During War In 1900 and again in 1907-10 he was Prime Minister and Minister of the Interior. During the period of the World War, from 1914 to 1919, he was Minister for Foreign Affairs, and thus was a member of the Paris Peace Congress and the diplomacy of that epoch. He had been Giolitti's foremost political foe and had strongly disapproved the Tripolitan War, though from patriotic motives he had no public attack upon it. In the World War he was willing to co-operate with any loyal man for Italy's sake. He first served in Salandra's Cabinet and then in Orlando's, and he went to the Paris Peace Congress as the second Italian delegate.

On the fall of the Orlando Cabinet on June 19, 1919, he retired to private life. He did not seek election to the Chamber in November, 1919, but was subsequently made a Senator. He suffered undeservedly some unpopularity because of Italy's failure to secure peace, but was esteemed by practically all disinterested men to be Italy's greatest financier, by the side of Cavour and Crispien, one of her greatest three Foreign Ministers.

He was never married.

Epigrams go off like firecrackers all through

THE SECOND EMPIRE By Philip Guedalla

So says the New York Post. But Mr. Guedalla's brilliant style in no way detracts from the authenticity of his picture of Napoleon III and his colorful career. The volume reads like a romance. The scenes and characters are endowed with reality and life. "No one," says the Post, "will willingly lay the book down unfinished." And, that, after all, is the real test, isn't it?

The rebellion of youth, as pictured by Arthur Tuckerman in his novel has none of the smartness or cynicism popularly attributed to be modern young man. On the contrary the emotions which prompt her to chuck his job and his pleasures to search for something more likely to strike a responsive chord somewhere within you, and prove a vent for some of the reckless impulses which youth creates and which age never quite effaces.

Critics continue to link Eugene Bagger's

Eminent Europeans with Strachey's "Eminent Victorians." If there is a similarity of style, certainly neither volume suffers by comparison. Mr. Bagger joins with the ten leading figures of Central Europe what Clinton Gilbert did with our "great" in his "Huroir" books, and the result is a tremendously interesting work of considerable historical and biographical importance. It is most entertaining, often startling, and the personal and political phases are of decided interest just now.

Silent Rites for Tridon

Family and Friends Look on Face and Close Coffin

Services for Andre Tridon, French psychologist, who died Wednesday night, were held yesterday at his home, 121 Madison Avenue. In accordance with his directions they were of the utmost simplicity and not religious.

His wish was that his family and friends should assemble at his coffin, look upon his face and then cover the coffin. That was all, except that he wished his body cremated. His wishes were carried out.

Among those at the silent service were his widow and her sister, Mrs. Grace Smith, of Hartford, Conn.; J. Spiessberg, Mr. Tridon's attorney, and Dr. M. A. Jaccodot, his physician.

The body was taken to Fresh Pond Crematory.

Birth, Engagement, Marriage, Death and in Memoriam Notices may be telephoned to The Tribune any time up to midnight for insertion in the next day's paper. Telephone Brekman 3000.
