JUDITH OF THE GODLESS VALLEY

Young Boswell Interviews Charles Dana Gibson

BECAUSE he is a well known illustrator, he is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, he is the author of "Sketches in London" and "People of Dickens," his son was a winning-crown captain, he is now in active charge of "Life." Down a long corridor, past doors, emitting voices in the process of being cultivated, notes from a youthful violin, the crash of a piano, Young Boswell hunted the studio of CHARLES DANA GIBSON, in the upper reaches of Carnegie Hall. In an enormous room, hung with figured tapestries, a sooty skylight at one end, MR. GIBSON wore a tilted drawing board. Young Boswell crawled into a high-backed chair, to watch the artist at work.

CHARLES DANA GIBSON—"I'm just grinding out a cartoon for 'Life.' Nothing particularly interesting. Young Boswell (Being of a definitive mind)—What is your idea of a perfect cartoon?"

CHARLES DANA GIBSON—Oh, well, that is a hard question to answer. If I knew I'd go out and make one. I wouldn't waste any time telling people about it.

Young Boswell looked over the artist's shoulder as he drew. President Harding was steering a primitive automobile. He had looked as though it should have been taken out of service long ago. Mr. Hughes rode in the rear, and Uncle Sam stood alongside, about to utter some cryptic phrase.

CHARLES DANA GIBSON—There's nothing interesting about me, either, as far as I can see. I didn't go to college, as you boys all did. I studied at the Art Students' League, and kept on drawing pictures. Then some one named them "The Gibson Girl," and I went on drawing them. Everything about me is just as done for. You see me just as I always am, in my work clothes.

He stood up to get a perspective of his drawing. He was very tall and rather boyish, straight and stalwart. To look at his white hair made youth a paradox. His low collared shirt and blue suit belonged to an struggling young artist.

CHARLES DANA GIBSON—"I'm sorry I didn't go to college, but I felt it was one of the boys when I used to go up to college to see the games and races with my son. It seemed to be a wonderful life."

Young Boswell—"You believe in youth, then, you don't agree with James Barrie, in his address to the students of Edinburgh University?"

CHARLES DANA GIBSON—Oh, yes, I read it when it came out in the paper and I've been trying to get a copy of it ever since.

Young Boswell drew from his pocket a copy of "Courage," which he carried about with him, as a kind of good luck piece, in his journalistic ventures.

Young Boswell—"It's been published in book form. Do you think that age is trying to keep youth from its share in running the world?"

CHARLES DANA GIBSON—Not intentionally, no. (He smiled kindly.) Excuse me, please. I have forgotten that you are here.

He sat down again at the drawing board and began to ink in the cartoon. The figures stood out strongly as his deft pen ran along the pencil tracings. His face now, contented, received faint buttons and wide stripes in a few efficient strokes.

Young Boswell—"You are running 'Life' now?"

CHARLES DANA GIBSON—Yes, you see, young fellow, there isn't anything startling or interesting about me. Everything is pretty much reminiscence for me. Everything I've done is far behind me. I just grind out cartoons for "Life." Get any copy and you can see what I'm doing.

Young Boswell left him inking his drawing. "Courage" slipped in his overcoat pocket, but he didn't read it going down in the elevator. He didn't need to. MR. GIBSON had given him that.

CERTAIN PEOPLE OF IMPORTANCE

OCCASIONALLY a work of fiction will give a clearer conception of the forces at work in the life of a nation than any studied treatise.

Certain People of Importance is, above all, a work of art, compelling in its interest. But it is at the same time a revelation of America's inmost self, expressed in terms of a typical American family's progress through life.

Mary E. Wilkins Freeman says: "It is a book which must be read by all good Americans. It is their duty and will be their pleasure and profit to read it."

Berengaria Takes Many To Europe for Christmas

400 Czechoslovakians Among Home-Going Passengers on Big Cunard Liner

The Berengaria, of the Cunard Line, sailed from here yesterday with 1,000 Europeans, including a party of 400 Czechoslovakians, who will pass the holidays with relatives and friends in their native land.

Henry W. Slocum, former national tennis champion and president of the United States Tennis Association, sailed on the vessel to represent this country at the international tennis conference in London on December 20 and 21. It is planned to divide the tennis tournaments into two divisions, American and European, he said, in order to eliminate as much traveling as possible by contestants. These new regulations will probably become effective next year, he declared.

Also sailing was the Swannany Alger, delegates from India to the League of Nations, who is returning after a two months' visit here and in Canada; L. A. G. Dra, gold mine developer, going home after three years' stay in this country to pass the winter hunting along the Nile; Harvey Ladew, going to England to hunt foxes; William Harris, chairman of the Ritz-Carlton hotel; Farnely W. Herrick, son of the late Farnely W. Herrick, and Mrs. Herrick, and K. V. R. Nichol, vice-president of the Armour Grain Company, and Mrs. Nichol.

The French liner Roussillon also departed yesterday for Vigo and Havre. It has among its passengers members of Cecil Sorel's Comedie Francaise Company. Others sailing included Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Higbie and Miss Elizabeth Higbie. Mr. Higbie is the treasurer of the Long Island Finance Corporation. Frederick Burlingham, a motion picture producer, was another voyager.

New Settlement House Opened by Aid Society

George F. Baker Jr. Donates Building on East Side in Memory of His Mother

The Florence Tucker Baker House, donated by George F. Baker Jr. in memory of his mother, was formally opened yesterday by the Friendly Aid Society. Miss Edith Kendall, secretary of the organization, was hostess.

The new house is a three-story brick building on the northwest corner of First Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street. It is intended as a community center and settlement for the children and mothers of the neighborhood. It contains a large kindergarten for small children, three clubrooms where mothers' sewing clubs and girls' gymnastic classes meet, a model kitchen for the housekeeping class of girls from eight to sixteen years old and ten bedrooms, where the resident workers of the institution may live.

Adjoining the house on the Thirty-fourth Street side is a lot which will be used for a gymnasium when the building funds have been raised.

The activities of the Florence Tucker Baker House include English classes for women, a children's junior Red Cross club, dancing clubs, history clubs, coal sales, literary meetings and other groups for boys and girls and their parents.

George Williams, Relief Worker, Dies at His Task

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 12.—A wireless dispatch from the American destroyer Edsall, stationed at Samsun, to the Near East Relief headquarters here announces the death of Mr. George Williams, who was formerly United States Vice-Consul at Milan, Mr. Williams was struck while rescuing orphans in the interior of Anatolia and bringing them to the Black Sea. His last achievement was the conveying of several thousand parentless children from Beirut to Constantinople. Although Mr. Williams was of frail physique, he insisted on trudging several hundred miles, often through knee-deep snow and bitter cold, at the head of great caravans of children. On the way to Samsun with the last detachment he led he fell victim to exposure and exhaustion.

Mr. Williams will be buried in the only Christian cemetery in northern Anatolia, where lie the bodies of other Americans who have given up their lives in humanitarian work in this region.
