

THE KERR JURY DISAGREES.

DISGRACED AFTER A WEARY FIGHT OF NEARLY FORTY HOURS. Eight for Conviction and Four for Acquittal on the Charge of Murder of a Man in a Bathing Machine in $50,000.

The Kerr jury, pale and hollow-eyed after their vigil of 39 hours and 36 minutes, took their seats in the jury box of the Court of Oyer and Terminer at 10:38 yesterday morning, assured Judge Patterson of their inability to agree upon a verdict, and were thereupon discharged.

Thomas B. Kerr spent the night at his residence, 48 West Fifty-sixth street. Under Sheriff Sexton and Order of Arrest Clerk Barney Martin slept in reclining chairs in a room adjoining that occupied by Kerr, and separated from it by folding doors. Kerr was punctual to the minute in his arrival at the court room. As usual, he was surrounded by a retinue of attorneys, and he stood by him from the first. E. Frank Cox laughed and joked with the defendant, but his efforts elicited few responsive smiles.

The Court did not convene at 10 o'clock, the hour to which it had been adjourned the night before, and the trial was not resumed until a long half hour before the Court gave any indication of existence. The spectators began to offer odds that the jury would not come in before the hour of adjournment, when suddenly, without any warning rap on the wood work by the officers, the imposing front of the room of the jury box appeared in the doorway, closely followed by the somewhat drooping forms of the other eleven.

They looked all broken up by the effort to make themselves unanimous, and although Big J. O'Sullivan made a brave attempt to smile his accustomed winning dry-goods-salesman's smile, it was conceded on all sides that the attempt was a dismal failure. The jurors were no sooner seated than Urbane Judge Patterson mounted the bench, and eloquent Col. Fellows took his place at the table before the jury, first, however, looking profoundly to that which he overheard before.

The jury was tremulously polled by Clerk Walsh, who evidently had a very good notion of the general expectancy. Then everybody waited for Judge Patterson to ask the question that he had asked on the night before, and he told the jury that he had received their message of the night before, and that he had no objection to their going to bed, but that he would not permit them to do so until they had reached a verdict.

The juror who stood out to the end of the acquittal was foreman Cornelius Howard, a stout, middle-aged man, with a few wrinkles on his forehead, and a pair of eyes that were bright and clear. He was dressed in a dark suit, and a white shirt with a high collar. He was the only juror who was not a member of the jury in the case of the man who was killed in the bathing machine.

LYNCHING ANDREW GRANDSTAFF.

He Had Killed an Entire Family and Did Not Long Escape Justice. VINOQA, Wis., June 2.—Soon after midnight a thousand determined men surrounded the jail in which Andrew Grandstaff, charged with the murder of Reuben Drake and family on the night of May 24, was confined. They demanded the prisoner, but the authorities refused to give him up. The barbed wire was then broken down and the officers were overpowered. An hour was spent in breaking down the steel cage, and then the prisoner fought with desperate fury against the mob that sought to enter. The struggle did not last long, and he was taken to a bound hand and feet, and was then taken to a place where preparations were made to hang him.

The appearance of the prisoner was shocking, as he was covered with blood from wounds received while the steel cage was being battered. A rope was placed around his neck, and the prisoner was asked what he had to say. He protested that he was innocent, but it was known that he had made a full confession in the court, and he was therefore hanged. He pleaded piteously for his life, but his entreaties were cut short by a pull at the rope, and he was hanged by the neck. He was then taken to a place where he was buried.

SALMON IN THE HUDSON.

Specimens in the Hands of Inevitable Fishermen—Fishways. The account of the first salmon catch of the season in North River, as given by THE SUN of May 12, has excited considerable interest among fishermen. As regards the construction of fishways to enable fish to get up the Hudson, the Hudson River Fish Commission has taken steps to see that the fish are not taken in the Hudson, but in the fishways. The fishway is a narrow channel, and the fish are taken in the fishways, and not in the Hudson. The fishway is a narrow channel, and the fish are taken in the fishways, and not in the Hudson.

The London Times' money article of May 24 is full of interesting statistics as to a revolution of the committee of the Stock Exchange, held this afternoon. It was resolved, after an exhaustive discussion, to order the establishment of a special department to effect registrations of American shares. The new department will be placed under the administration of Mr. H. C. Buppitt, the Secretary of the Share and Bond Department. The committee also resolved to amend the rules of the committee, so that the committee should have power to suspend the registration of shares for a period of six months.
