

JUGGLING WITH THE RECORD

MR. CALL'S FRIGHTFUL EXAMPLE MAY BE STRIP UP AN INVESTIGATION.

Speech of fourteen pages printed that was never delivered. Public showing what small things his colleagues in the Senate had accomplished.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The resolution which Senator Inghalls has introduced in the Senate providing for the investigation of the conduct of Senator Call in falsifying the Congressional Record is likely to stir up a very interesting examination in the manner in which this party publication is judged with. The abuses of the Record of both Houses have become so flagrant that the leaders have determined that something must be done to put a stop to them.

For many years all sorts of outrages have been committed upon the Record under the guise of "leave to print," "extending remarks," and other subterfuges for giving an official character to language never delivered except in the imagination of the speaker.

The cases that led up to the attack of Senator Inghalls upon Mr. Call are interesting. On June 2 Mr. Call rose to a question of privilege, and exhibiting a pamphlet purporting to be a review of his Senatorial record, said:

This pamphlet contains charges upon me of every species of crime, false swearing, disseminating lies, and a host of other things. I have read it carefully and I find it to be a very interesting and valuable feature of Mr. Call's appendix.

Table with 3 columns: Name of Senator, Total number of bills introduced, and Number of bills passed. Lists names like Call, Cannon, and others with their respective counts.

This exhibit made several of the Senators very angry, particularly Mr. Edmunds, who is made to issue a declaration that he never delivered the speech in question.

Senator Butler suggested that the words "leave to print" be changed to "leave to be printed" and that the printer be held responsible for the publication of the Record.

Senator Call's reply was that during the Congressional Record which are of great value to the public, and that he would not be deterred from publishing them.

THE SPEAKER AND THE LAWMARKING.

The Great Influence of Mr. Reed—Important Bills that Have Been Hindered.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Thomas B. Reed has practically completed the task which he set out to accomplish when elected Speaker of the Fifty-first Congress. The dictator, as he is generally called by the men of the House who fear, dislike, and admire him, is now resting on his laurels and congratulating himself for having forced his personality upon the work of Congress more strongly than any of his predecessors ever did.

The programme of legislation which has been enacted in the House up to date was mapped out by Mr. Reed in his little law office in Portland six months before he came to Washington to enter the contest for the Speakership.

It is the very general opinion that the Senate will be compelled to adjourn after settling the silver and tariff questions. The Republicans have abandoned the Election bill because the Democrats have sworn to talk it to death.

Mr. Reed has the proud satisfaction of feeling that not one has been seriously hurt by his rule. He has managed to give the Democrats and Republicans alike to support or yield to his wishes, and has had wonderful success in obtaining and holding the assistance of all the strong men in the House.

The Senate now finds itself compelled either to remain here during all the hot months of summer in order to act upon the big bills introduced by the House, or by adjourning without considering them, allowing the impression to go out to the country that they did not care to consider them.
