

ROB, REEL AND GUN.

Mythology as an Antidote for Snake Poison. It is injected under the skin, and the Great Cure in America—News from the South.

Northern, Western, and Eastern sportsmen are with each recurring season looking with more favor upon the superior advantages offered by the Northern States in the way of field sports.

abundant, one has the positive assurance that within a comparatively narrow area the hunter will find the opportunity for the somewhat lengthy journey as easy to secure.

At the South the opportunities are not exhausted, as with us, within a brief period after the opening of the season.

one of hundreds, is found in the state of affairs at Wilton, N. H., whence before the end of the season the number of avocets is an abundance of ruffed grouse. Such was indeed the fact, but during the month of September some seven or eight hundred of these birds were taken in snares, thereby reducing the quantity to a point no longer available for legitimate sport.

in the Southern States, particularly at points in the mountains, the game is abundant, but little game, apart from deer, is killed for the market; consequently the incentive which affects so disastrously our supply is not present there.

The advantages of the winter climate are too well known to need repetition, particularly as regards wildfowl shooting. The season for general sport will open. The legal restrictions are removed before that date; but the heavy foliage does not yield much to the effect of frost before the first month of the winter. It is a growing practice in the Southern States for land owners to test their property as regards the value of a season's game.

Mr. Charles B. Reynolds has recently compiled a book of the Game Laws. It is not only a valuable reference work, but it is also a positive benefactor to those who are under the frequent necessity of consulting the laws of the various States. It is a compilation of the laws of every State and Territory of the Union and of the District of Columbia, and contains a provision is omitted, not even those of the most trifling local significance, and the admirably complete and up-to-date information of a glance to find precisely the information frequently been asserted in usually well-informed journals that a license fee of $25 was levied on the hunter in the State of Florida.

proached, there are several methods of catching them. The simplest is made out of the wing bones of a turkey, through which the bird is drawn by a cord, and then the cord is fastened to a stake. The bird is then placed in the trap, and the cord is pulled tight, so that the bird is held in the trap.

Another method is to use a net, which is set in a line across the field. The bird is then caught in the net, and the cord is pulled tight, so that the bird is held in the trap.

A third method is to use a snare, which is set in a line across the field. The bird is then caught in the snare, and the cord is pulled tight, so that the bird is held in the trap.

A fourth method is to use a trap, which is set in a line across the field. The bird is then caught in the trap, and the cord is pulled tight, so that the bird is held in the trap.
