

GOTA WAY WITH MONEY BAG

ROBBED A YOUNG WOMAN AND CAUSED AN OLDER ONE'S DEATH.

Passed by a Crowd of Jersey City Clerks and Merchants. He Led Them Through Back Streets and Churches and Kept a Robbery Done at a Bank's Door.

Jersey City had a thief chase yesterday afternoon in which a considerable part of the business element of the population took part. The thief, carrying a satchel containing $1,000 in cash and $100 in checks, which he had just snatched from the hands of a young woman who was taking it to a bank to deposit it, led his pursuers a race through winding streets, up and down stairs and through churches, and over fences, finally giving all hands the slip and getting away with his plunder. All that the police have to establish the identity of the man is a meagre description of him given by the young woman who was robbed. She is particularly anxious to get him, as in addition to perpetrating one of the boldest crimes that ever took place in the city, he was indirectly responsible for the death of an old woman, whose weak heart gave out when she saw him scale the fence of a churchyard and heard the shouts of his pursuers.

The young woman who was robbed is Miss Laura Rickerick, 23 years old, of 1305 West street, Jersey City. She is employed as cashier by the Prudential Life Insurance Company in its Jersey City office at 1 Montgomery street. Every afternoon at about 1:30 o'clock Miss Rickerick takes the receipts of the morning to the Hudson County National Bank on Washington street, near York street. She has been doing this for several years and has never lost a cent before. She has also been employed at the bank as a cashier for some time. She left her office at the usual time yesterday, carrying a satchel containing the amount in cash and checks mentioned above. The trip of three and a half blocks to the bank was made without incident. Miss Rickerick kept a good grip on the satchel and did not notice any suspicious persons around.

A flight of about ten steps leads to the door of the bank from the street. When she started up these steps she noticed a slim young man standing on the top step. He was in plain sight of a number of the employees of the bank and as he was well dressed and apparently respectable, it never occurred to Miss Rickerick to suspect him of evil intentions. It was just as she reached the top step that the man made a forward movement. He grasped her by the wrist and started down on Miss Rickerick's right. Just as he passed her he grabbed the satchel. The woman had related her grip on it for the time being, as she was holding up her skirt with one hand. The thing was done so quickly and so neatly that the thief was down the steps and making up the block as fast as he could go before Miss Rickerick realized what had happened.

Then without further loss of time she called for help. The bank clerks came running out and a number of other men ran up the steps to find out what was the matter. All that Miss Rickerick could do was to point at the fleeing man and gasp out that she had been robbed. The thief in the meantime was making most satisfactory progress from his point of view. He was fully a block away from the bank and the only person who had witnessed the robbery and given chase were two men who were standing opposite the bank when it occurred. They had started in pursuit without delay. They were George Outwater and Samuel J. Herbert of 107 York street. When the main pursuing column got in motion, the thief had just swung around from Washington street into Grand street, and was only about thirty yards behind him. He ran into an office building, went up a short flight of stairs, through a hall and down another flight of stairs, then he turned and made through the hall on the ground floor to the front again and out into Grand street through the very door by which he had entered the building.

It was a long street of pursuing, chasing citizens of Jersey City that came running out of the narrow hall of that office building. The thief was taking long strides up Grand street, and the pursuers went after him valiantly, being joined at this juncture by numerous other merchants and clerks. At the corner of Grand and Warren streets is the Free Reformed Church. This is a high fence, and it was here that the thief was forced to a fraction of a second to stop. He began to slip on the side. When he got to the top he waved the satchel defiantly at his pursuers and dropped off on the other side. Outwater was the first of the pursuing party to get up the fence after him, and Herbert was close behind. The rest of the party, fat men, thin men, long men and short men, climbed the leaders, some falling back three or four times before they finally got over and went on more time than it would have taken them to run around the block and head off the thief on the other side.

As Outwater and Herbert dropped into the yard of the church they saw to their consternation that the thief was rapidly slipping up the fence at the other end. This fence separates the yard of the Free Reformed Church from the yard of St. Matthew's Church, Episcopal Church. On top of this fence the thief once more waved the satchel and dropped off into the yard of St. Matthew's Church. Outwater and Herbert kept up the chase, but they were not in the thief's class as fence-climbers. He just went across this churchyard, up the fence on the other side and out into Suffolk street. The other side of the fence was still struggling over fences. As the thief went out on a public highway once more, and it became apparent to Outwater and Herbert that they were being distanced, they set up a great shouting, hoping to attract the attention of some one who would have the nerve to head off the man with the satchel.

The latter paid no attention to the shouters behind him, but attended strictly to business. He ran along Suffolk street, back into Warren street, and from there into Morris street, where Outwater and Herbert, completely winded, gave up the chase. Then the other pursuers came up and told the young man who had done all the best of the chasing that they ought never to have given it up. As the man who had done all the best of the chasing by this time, having no trace of the satchel behind him, it was useless to continue the pursuit, and a party left for the police station to give the police their first information of the matter. One or two policemen had been passed the head of the run just described, but because of the heat they didn't care to leave the chase. The woman who died from an excitement of the chase was Mrs. Henrietta Fubling, 61 years old, who lived on the second floor of the house at 10 Suffolk street, opposite the yard of St. Matthew's Church. She had been sick for some time with heart trouble and was sitting in the window. She heard shouts and looking up she saw the man with the satchel come over the fence, followed by a number of men shouting for the police at the top of their lungs. She jumped to her feet, and ran to the door, and the excitement was too much for her. She jumped to her feet, and a scream and fell to the floor unconscious. The stranger ran to her assistance and tried to restore her to her senses, but the woman was dead. When the doctor arrived the woman was dead.

During the chase Miss Rickerick had returned the satchel to the police. She described the thief as being about 25 years old and had a dark complexion. He was about 5 feet 6 inches tall, had a thin nose and a thin mustache. The police said last night that the thief was a young man of about 25 years of age, who had been seen in the vicinity of the insurance company.

ONE OF CROKER'S DOGS STOLEN.

Then Returned With $10 to the Keeper at Utica—One John Allen Arrested.

UTICA, July 18.—A man who says his name is John Allen is in custody at the police station here on a charge of having been concerned in the stealing of an English bulldog belonging to Richard Croker of New York and valued at $500. The dog, with fifteen others, was being transported from New York to Mr. Croker's summer home at Richfield Springs. It was stolen from a car in the Central yards here about 6:30 o'clock this morning and was recovered about two hours later. Allen will not talk about the matter further than to deny all knowledge of the affair. Martin Hendrick, who has for some time been employed by Mr. Croker as keeper of his dogs, had charge of the animals, which travelled in a special car. The car arrived here at 5 A. M. to-day and was detached from the train and left standing in the Central yards. It was shortly after its arrival that the dog was stolen. Hendrick describes the dog as follows:

"The dog I knew this morning was when that fellow [Allen] woke me up and told me that the train had reached Utica. I left the car to get breakfast and returning in half an hour found the dog was gone. When I questioned Allen he told me that he knew where the dog was and that if I would go and hide in a box car for ten minutes the dog would be returned to me. He also offered me $10 if I wouldn't say anything about the matter; so I took the ten and hid in a car. When I returned the dog was in its place and everything was all right."

When the railroad men learned that the animal had been stolen from the car they at once telephoned to the police and Allen was placed under arrest. The theory of the police is that Allen had taken the dog on the train from New York City with the intention of stealing the dog when the car reached Utica. The police will investigate the matter. The car of dogs left at 11:10 attached to the train for Richfield Springs.

Called a "King"—Sent Here from Cariboo Mine—Worth $138,276.

A cone-shaped gold brick, such as is technically termed a "king" of gold, reached the local agents of the Bank of Montreal, on Wall street, yesterday, en route to the United States Assay office, where it goes to-day to be melted up. The cone, which is probably the largest that has ever reached the city, came from the Cariboo Consolidated Hydraulic mine in British Columbia, and represented the first clean-up of this year, being the result of sixty-two days' washing with 2,500 miners' inches of gravel daily. Its total weight is 685 pounds and its value is $138,276. The glittering and precious metal stands six inches high and is six inches in circumference.

FORD AGAIN TRIES FOR DIVORCE.

This Time He Charges Sam Small's Daughter With Deserting Him.

RICHMOND, Va., July 17.—Stewart H. Ford has again brought suit for divorce from his wife, Lola Small Ford, daughter of the Rev. Sam Small, the evangelist and editor. He married her after she had been divorced from a man named Jackson in Tennessee. Ford is a son of a former wealthy hotel man in Richmond.

The couple did not live together long. Soon after they separated Ford sued for a divorce, charging his wife with infidelity. The reply of the wife, which is said to have been written by her father, was a very racy document. Ford was charged with being the cruellest husband that ever lived. By agreement that suit was dismissed. District Attorney Edgar Allen refused to take the case to court on behalf of Ford to-day. Ford says in his declaration that for several months prior to May 18, 1897, the wife of the defendant had been in the habit of deserting him and of living with another man. He says that he has been in the habit of deserting her and of living with another man. He says that he has been in the habit of deserting her and of living with another man.

SEIGEL-COOPER'S COP HELD.

MAGISTRATE SENDS HIM FOR TRIAL FOR ASSAULTING A CUSTOMER.

Seventeen Witnesses, Mostly Employees of the Firm, Test That He Had Assaulted a Customer of Mrs. Rowan of Greenpoint in the Store. —Mer. Physician Tells of Her Bruises.

At the close of a hearing that lasted for several hours Magistrate Mayo in the Jefferson Market police court yesterday held Charles F. McGrath, the Siegel-Cooper department store's special policeman, for trial on the charge of assaulting Mrs. Eliza Higgins Rowan of 11 Nassau avenue, Greenpoint, a customer of the store, on Thursday last. The defence occupied almost all the time allotted to the hearing, seventeen witnesses, all but three of whom were employees of the store, being put on the stand to testify to the patient and courteous treatment Mrs. Rowan says she didn't receive in the store. The three outsiders were Frederick Seng, a shoekeeper of 310 East Ninth street; Mrs. Carrie Jelliff of 213 Third avenue and Mrs. Raebuck of 115 West Ninety-sixth street. All three testified that Mrs. Rowan at the time of the alleged assault was hysterical in the Sixth avenue vestibule of the store, absolutely refusing to go out or in. They also unanimously asserted that Mrs. Rowan walked peacefully from the vestibule to the elevator, after refusing to go in. McGrath only testifies that he saw her, but that he saw her only leading her out of the store. McGrath only testifies that he saw her, but that he saw her only leading her out of the store.

"But can you explain one thing to me," said Magistrate Mayo to Mrs. Raebuck, the most emphatic of the three witnesses. "What induced Mrs. Rowan suddenly to yield and go to the elevator with McGrath?" "Yes, she went," replied the witness stolidly. "But what caused her to go?" "She seemed to be hysterical, I suppose." "You don't know with certainty?" "No, I don't know." "Do you know Mrs. Jelliff put in the counsel for the complainant?" "No, I don't think I do," said Mrs. Raebuck. "I mean the woman who testified this morning. She is sitting in front of you now." "Well, I have seen her."

"What were you doing in her company during the time she was in the store?" "Oh, there were a great many ladies—"

"Answer my question. Were they only waiting for lunch together?" "Only two or three."

"No, we had a gentleman with us." "And you had a gentleman with you, pointing to a man who had been lingering on the bridge since the hearing began." "What is his name?" "Mr. Goldsmith. He is in the employ of the Siegel-Cooper Company."

"I presume he is," said the counsel. McGrath exhibited a bent and headless pin when he was put on the stand. The pin looked as if it had been broken. McGrath looked at the pin and then looked at the witness who had just testified that he had seen McGrath with Mrs. Rowan. McGrath looked at the pin and then looked at the witness who had just testified that he had seen McGrath with Mrs. Rowan.

LIVE TOPICS ABOUT TOWN.

The philanthropic young woman who gave up the delights of a summer at Newport to conduct a home for poor children in the country had to encounter one of the difficulties that invariably attend such enterprises. Such city visitors as never dreamed of the residents of the town selected for their entertainment, and every possible means of sending them somewhere else is usually tried before the country towns submit to their presence. One Long Island village was last year divided into two sharply defined parties over the proposition of some of the summer residents to establish there a home for boys who would otherwise have been compelled to pass their summers in the slums of New York. Social peace was restored only by the appointment of a committee to investigate the matter. The committee reported that the village was not a suitable place for such a home, and that the residents of the town were not prepared to receive such a home.

The building of a new Astor Hotel on Long Acres square has been expected for some time. It was announced that the new hotel would be located at the corner of Broadway and Forty-second street had been definitely decided upon as the site of a hotel to be built by John Jacob Astor who owns the property. It is now said that the new hotel is to be three blocks further uptown and on the west side of Broadway. It is expected that this new establishment will replace the Waldorf-Astoria of the main class of hotels in the city. WAR OF THE RICHARDSONS.

Della Is Now Trying to Evict Her Stepmother From the "Spite House."

Della Grace Richardson, daughter of the late Joseph Richardson, the eccentric millionaire who built and occupied the "spite house" at Lexington avenue and Eighty-second street, is now engaged in a legal war with her stepmother, Mrs. Emma J. Richardson, from the building. The case was to have been tried yesterday before Justice Jacobs in the Yorkville civil court, but upon agreement of the opposing lawyers it was put over until July 24.

The Richardson case has been constantly at law since the "spite house" builder died three years ago, and Mrs. Richardson has continued to live in the house. FUNERAL OF MRS. MAYER.

The Woman Who Was Shot at Mahwah Held Her Grief in Silence.

The funeral of Mrs. John Mayer, who shot herself last Friday at her home at Mahwah, was held yesterday in the entrance hall of the Mayer house. The coffin that held the body rested on a catafalque at the back of the hall, and over it and on the floor about it and among the candelabra were great heaps of flowers that had been sent by friends of Mrs. Mayer. All the members of the Mayer family who were present at the funeral were dressed in black. The funeral was held in the Mayer house.

A clever New York woman who spent some of her leisure time last winter in compiling a Greek text-book for use in schools has been struggling ever since to live down a reputation for which she was not responsible. She is not a typical blue-stocking, and none of her friends would have suspected that she was a good classical scholar, and her text-book was really a recreation for her. Her maid discovered the formation in rather a casual way while working on a Greek book, and by a process of elimination she ascertained that the book was hers. She was not responsible for the book, and she was not responsible for the book.

Brighter Outlook in Famines-Stricken India.

Aloidy dispatched here by the Christian Herald yesterday from Baroda, India, says: "Special and official telegrams received here from the famine districts indicate a more cheerful outlook. Scarcely a day has passed since the famine has been so severe and the mortality so great. Elsewhere the rainfall has been of a fairly good amount, and the crops are beginning to show signs of improvement. There has been a gratifying rainfall in Rajasthan, and rainfall in India, which is always a source of suffering during famine, also reports a moderate amount of rain."

Decision Against County Clerk Saffin's Widow.

Shortly after the death of her husband the widow of County Clerk Henry C. Saffin of Brooklyn brought a suit against the city of New York to recover amounts he had expended in reindorsement of the office. She got a verdict for $76,507.50. The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial. The court holds that Mr. Saffin was not entitled to any compensation for the work, but his necessary expenses should be paid.
