GO HOME TO BED, SAYS COURT

AFTER HEARING MISS CLAYTON AND MISS HUBBELL WRANGLE.

"And if You Think You May Be Disturbed, Lock Yourself up," said the judge, "as the hearing on the merits of the lively six-day row in the Boarding House."

Fatelle Clayton and Lillian Hubbell, leading ladies in the dramatic comedy that has been running for the last six nights at the boarding house at 118 West Forty-fourth street, accompanied by boarders, lawyers and a maid of all work, appeared in the West Side Court early yesterday morning.

Just four hours after they made their entrance the case was called. The entire cast had missed its luncheon and was in no very good humor. When the curtain went up Miss Clayton, who for the time being was complainant, raised her veil with the air of a baseball player who believes that he will get at least three bases on the first ball pitched. Miss Hubbell was calm, though it was apparent that she was trying to get into the focus of the limelight.

Magistrate Jansen glared over the top of his nose glasses.

"I thought you ladies had agreed to stop this wrangling," he said.

"Your Honor," said Miss Clayton, but she was waved aside by the court, and her lawyer, the third she has had in three days, spoke for her.

"Your Honor, when the parties were last here they agreed to keep apart," Miss Clayton consented to permit Miss Hubbell and her boarders to stay in the house until Monday, despite the fact that Miss Hubbell has owed $167 rent since April 15. In defiance of the agreement Miss Hubbell has insisted on entering Miss Clayton's apartment. We want you to compel Miss Hubbell to leave the house."

"Why did you go in her room?" asked the court.

"I went to serve her breakfast," Miss Hubbell replied.

"She could have sent Ella, the maid," said Miss Clayton.

"Ella would not go, your Honor, and as I had agreed to serve Miss Clayton's meals, there was no alternative."

Miss Clayton then proceeded to give the side of the story.

"After Miss Hubbell had failed to pay the rent," she related, "I got two city marshals to come to the house so that I could get into the parlor, because the door had been locked."

Miss Hubbell's lawyer asked the witness if she had not torn down a lot of draperies.

"Certainly not," she exclaimed.

"Oh, my! Will you listen to that," a voice was heard to say. The speaker was Miss Livingston, a boarder.

"Why, Judge," she continued, "Miss Clayton tore down a lot of stuff, and, besides, she threw all of my clothes in the bathtub. Then she called Miss Hubbell a 'housey.' I haven't had a wink of sleep in four nights and there are not many in the house who have."

The judge looked at the clock.

"The street," he said, "you people stop this. Miss Hubbell may stay there until Monday—that is agreed. Now all of you go back to the house and go to bed. You look tired. If you think you may be disturbed, lock yourselves in. That's all."

"WIRETAPPERS" STOLE HIS $1,200

They Didn't Even Take the Trouble to Let Steinhilber "Bet" When They Saw His Roll.

Abe Steinhilber, a clothing dealer of 367 East Houston street, told the 10th district police yesterday how he had been robbed of $1,200.

A few days ago Steinhilber met a man who told him he was making money so fast that he would soon be as rich as John D. Rockefeller. Steinhilber asked to be let in on the scheme.

"Well, I'd be willing if my chums would consent," said the fellow.

Then he informed Steinhilber that his scheme was the old one of beating the races on advance information obtained by wire tappers. The wapper of Steinhilber's talk with the stranger was that the latter met him on Friday afternoon at an uptown hotel and took him to 102 West Thirty-eighth street.

On the parlor floor of this house Steinhilber was introduced to six other men, the six and the steiner consulted and after a short talk decided to let Steinhilber in on their easy method of making a fortune. One of the men in the place was introduced as "Dr. Hasbrook."

"He's the greatest plunger of the century," the steiner said. "He makes Pittsburgh Phil look like thirty cents."

Thereupon "Dr. Hasbrook" went to the telephone and calmly told the man on the other end that he would bet $5,000 on Workman at Jamaica. When Steinhilber learned to his satisfaction that Workman really won the first race, he uncovered his roll of $1,200 and decided that he would be a sport by putting $100 on the next race.

The moment the swindlers saw the roll they jumped and pushed him and took his
