

CHINA OBJECTS TO TREATY.

MAKES FORMAL PROTEST TO RUSSIA AND JAPAN. It Resolves Manchuria should be evacuated in Six Months Instead of Eighteen Months and the Proposed Treaty for the Evacuation of Manchuria...

Washington, Sept. 23.—It became known here today that the Chinese Government has made a formal protest to the Russian and Japanese governments concerning the conditions set forth in the treaty of peace signed at Portsmouth...

The peace treaty provides that Manchuria shall be evacuated within eighteen months. The Chinese Government has informed Russia and Japan that this is by far too great a length of time for the troops of the two governments to continue to occupy Manchuria...

China believes that some months is entirely sufficient, and she wants to see the evacuation of Manchuria completed in that period. The provision made for guarding the railways actually means an armed force of perhaps 15,000 men in Chinese territory.

China has pledged herself to protect the railroads and their employees, and has requested both Russia and Japan to relinquish that stipulation of the peace treaty, pointing out that not only is the guard far too great, but it is unnecessary and would certainly be the cause of much trouble before long.

The treaty of peace provides for a guard of fifteen men to every kilometer of railroad. Roughly estimated there are about 1,000 miles of railway in Manchuria in the possession of the Russian and Japanese Governments...

The Chinese Government regards the maintenance of the guard in Manchuria of such a size that it constitutes a small army in itself as a menace, and it does not propose to agree to any such plan. Some time ago, on the eve of the peace conference, China informed both Russia and Japan that any decisions concerning the disposition of or affecting Chinese territory would not be recognized by China unless it was first consulted.

Whether or not China will gain the points she is now contending for is a question. The treaty of peace cannot be changed, and if Russia and Japan accede to the Chinese claims some separate agreement will be required. It will probably be a difficult task.

As far as is known in Washington China has not received answers to her protest from either Japan or Russia. The legation here was informed of the protest several days ago and the notes to Russia and Japan are understood to have been sent out some time previous.

CHINESE BOYCOTT ENDING.

No Sign of It in and About Shanghai, Where American Trade Is Active.

Washington, Sept. 23.—The Chinese boycott, at Shanghai at least, has come to an end, according to a despatch received at the State Department today from Consul-General Rodgers. Mr. Rodgers's despatch is as follows: "No longer any evidence of boycott in or about Shanghai. American trade active, particularly with North China. There has been no stamping of goods, as has been reported. On the whole, conditions appear to be satisfactory. The reference to stamping of goods is understood to mean the steps reported to have been taken by the boycotters to mark American goods with a stamp, 'made in America,' so that the merchants could not be mistaken as to the origin of the products they purchased."

LITTLE GIRL WHO SEES THINGS.

DEAR MAM, OR GROSSMAN'S HOUSE, I LIVE IN THE HOUSEHOLD.

Police Seem to Think That It's a Medical Case. A Hinted Which the Savage Intruder Laid the "Wild West" on When the Doctor Sought a Wound to Dress.

Irene Grossman, who is 15 years old, went to her mother, Mrs. May F. Grossman, the widow of a Harlem boss teamster, last Thursday, and said that a large black negro had been in the house. The Grossmans live at 522 West 142d street. There was no indication that a black or white burglar had been around except that some large vases had been moved from their pedestals in the back parlor and had been hidden behind a sofa in the front parlor.

The next night the girl said she saw the black burglar again; this time it was found that some pictures had been taken from the parlor walls and had been hidden behind chairs.

Mrs. Grossman was much impressed by Irene's story. She sent for the police and told Capt. Thompson of the West 125th street station that she believed that the girl really had seen something—and then Mrs. Grossman confided to Capt. Thompson that what the child had seen was the ghost of the late Grossman, boss teamster. Capt. Thompson was so interested that he set three detectives to watch the Grossman house. They were still watching it early yesterday morning when a uniformed policeman came running up the street and dashed in. He had been summoned by telephone. Irene's burglar had called again.

Mrs. Grossman, coming down stairs yesterday morning, found Irene at the foot of the stairs; the girl was almost fully dressed. A bandage was roughly tied about her forehead. Her mother applied restoratives and sent for a physician. Irene came to pretty soon. She said that she had come downstairs and discovering, in the dining room, that she had left off one of her hair pins, she went to the dining room to get it. When her foot was on the third step, she was grabbed from behind by a man who said hoarsely: "I have got you." At that moment, Irene said she feared, but not before the burglar had hit her on the head with a club. She didn't know how the bandage came to be wrapped about her head, but she supposed that the burglar had done this. The bandage was removed from the dining room table. There was a large black spot on the girl's forehead, which she said she had struck her head. The black spot washed off when the doctor prepared to dress the wound.

The police were very sure that no burglar had entered the house, while they were watching. But the family pointed out two pictures turned face toward the wall in the parlor. On one of them was written "Irene Grossman, 522 West 142d street," and on the other was a demand over the same initials for $500. Could a child have done that? asked the Grossmans. Capt. Thompson, after observing the childish, unnormal character of the handwriting, said that he thought a child could have done it. The girl's physician said that he thought she had been all right for some time, but Irene's young brother, John Grossman, who is now managing the family hair-lining business, was so excited when he heard of the mystery of the night that he drove from his yard at 150th street and the Harlem River to the house so fast that he killed his horse.

CRUELTY IN THE FRENCH CONGO.

Report of the Late Count De Brazza Contains Grave Charges.

PARIS, Sept. 23.—The report of the late Count de Brazza upon his investigation of charges against officers of the French Congo, is said by the Matin to contain grave charges against the Governor General, Emile Gentil. The Matin says that the Minister of the Colonies must either countermand the order for a national funeral in honor of the explorer's memory or give a dismissal of the account given by General Gentil. The cruelties alleged against the latter include hanging up women by their feet until they died and ordering negroes clubbed to death. It is said that he is responsible for the sacrifice of an enormous number of natives.

Count de Brazza was ordered last February by the French Government to prosecute to the Congo district and investigate charges of irregularity and brutality that had been preferred against the officers. He performed his mission, but arrived at Dakar, Senegal, on September 13 in a critical condition of health and died on September 15, thus ending a glorious and useful series of African explorations. The French Minister of the Colonies in notifying the Countess of her husband's death, said that in him France had lost one of her greatest citizens, and President Loubet telegraphed his condolences.

STRONG ARBITRATION PACT.

NORWAY AND SWEDEN ABOUT THE HAGUE COURT.

Even Questions of Vital Interest to the Submitted When Their Importance to in Historic Arbitration Agreement to Make Public in Both Countries.

Special Cable Dispatch to THE SUN. Stockholm, Sept. 23.—The text of the agreement arrived at by the Swedish and Norwegian commissioners at Carlsbad was published simultaneously in Sweden and Norway at a public press conference.

The first article relates to arbitration, and the two countries agree to submit to the Hague court for a period of ten years all matters of dispute except those which affect the independence, integrity or vital interests of either. But in the event of difference of opinion on the vitality of such questions the court is to decide. This agreement can only be ended by two years notice from one of the parties.

Article 2 deals with the neutral zone which is to be established on each side of the border and in which the existing Norwegian fortifications are to be demolished within the next eight months. One exception to this is the Rongsvinger group of fortifications which may not be extended either as regards the erection of armaments or the garrison, which has not exceeded 300 men, not counting conscripts. The agreement provides that two military officers of foreign Powers, who shall select a third, shall form a court to decide whether the Norwegian forts have been sufficiently dismantled.

The third article deals with reindeer pastures, etc.; the fourth with intertraffic, and the fifth with common waterways, the usual international rules of Government being provided in the two last cases. King Oscar binds himself, when the Riksdag and the Storting have accepted the agreement, to rescind the act of union and declare Norway an independent State.

The public of Stockholm are satisfied generally. They consider that the only material concession made to Norway is the exclusion of the 200-man garrison group of forts from the neutral zone.

Nationalist circles here criticize the extent to which the Hague tribunal has been invoked for future arbitration. Never since the tribunal existed have two Powers contracted to allow the Hague to decide when they, themselves cannot agree, what questions shall be held to affect integrity, independence or vital interests of the contracting parties. A Carlist agreement allows the Hague court to decide this which, according to the Swedish Nationalists, is an advantage to Norway as a new State.

GIRARD'S PLENTY: NO GIRARD.

JUST THE OTHER SIDE OF THE TRAMP'S FINGER-RING.

One Wild Looking Man Hugged Girard of Hungarians Leather with a Pile of Money and Young Man With Finger-Ring and Wide Hair Doing Best.

PERHAPS, Sept. 23.—There have been few, if any, important developments today in the search for Joseph J. Girard, the suspected murderer of Augusta Pfeiffer, who has been supposed to be in hiding in this vicinity. As the days go by the belief among the natives that Girard has never been and is not now here grows stronger.

Detectives Schoering and Illich, who have been on this case since Friday, are still clinging, however, to the theory that Girard is within a radius of a few miles of Peekskill. They returned to New York on the half past 8 o'clock train last night but were back here at 8:11 this morning and have been following clues more or less promising to them all day.

Chief of Police Seabury and Officer Conklin took the 8 o'clock car for Verplanck's Point today and have been following the reported hideout of Clarence Blakeley yesterday afternoon, but with no tangible results. The New York detectives have practically abandoned that episode.

Albert Stinson, a Verplanck's Point lad, and another boy while carrying lunch to Stinson's father at the Pallett brickyard this noon, allege that they were accosted while crossing a bit of woods by a tramp who demanded the dinner pail of them. They took to their heels and escaped.

A son of Milton Lounsbury, who lives at the lower end of Washington street, not far from Montrose, claims that a strange man resembling Girard called at the Lounsbury house at eleven to-night and obtained food. Another report comes from a big farm house to the east of Peekskill that a man the counterpart of Girard called there for food. The habits of an Italian saloon say that a man like Girard visited the place early today and begged aid. A small collection was made up for him.

More chicken feathers and fresh campfires have been discovered by enterprising newspaper correspondents. These things were reported in an article yesterday by Detectives Illich and Shoering following them up. They reported at Police Headquarters at 7:30, after a day's fruitless search for to tell the combination to get for a night search.

The numerous volunteer sleuths of yesterday are far less to-day. Sunday was a holiday, but with the return of Monday the greater part of them had to leave their amateur detective work and return to earning their daily bread. The spirit of the enterprise which has pervaded the atmosphere has subsided considerably and the belief grows stronger with every hour that Girard has never been here, and if he has he long since escaped to the northward.

There are of course dense woods in this vicinity in which he might hide for many days without being discovered. The fact remains that two New York detectives, a portion of a Peekskill police force, the entire town constabulary and scores of amateur sleuths and tramps have hunted for him for five days to discover more than the usual number of panhandlers, Hudson Valley tramps and exciting incidents that always happen or are reported to happen when a community has been stirred up as this has been.

Chief Seabury took a little trip over Empire Grove in the early afternoon to see if he could find any more of the woods there who saw a man whose description conforms to that of the much sought but elusive Girard.

"I don't say it's Girard," said the chief when he returned, "but I believe that we are very near to finding a man who is anxious to hide from somebody. This morning I talked with the constable who had seen a strange man as late as 4 o'clock this morning. They said that a man whose clothes were in bad shape and one of whose feet was in a cast, and who had a beard and skulked around, running back into the woods from time to time. He approached some of them and asked for a night's shelter and they gave him a room and a few nickels and dimes and he went back into the woods."

"When I showed Girard's picture they said the face was the same. A man saw him once and a woman once. I hardly think he can get across the river. I saw a man with a beard and a cap, whom the Somerset county authorities believe to be Girard, is in the Somerset county jail here awaiting identification. He was picked up by a constable near Barfoot Saturday afternoon after he had been found unconscious by the roadside. He has a scar on his left wrist, another on his right thumb and on his face. He gave the name of Michael Smithwick. He told a rambling story of his wanderings and was unable to give a clear account of the main details of the Southwick and emaciated condition and his clothing was badly torn and soiled."

ALBANY, Sept. 23.—The man arrested in Mohawk river, who was named as John Johnson Arbuckle, was born in Ireland and is about 45 years old. He wore a jumper under a black coat and had no hair on his head. He is held at the Newburgh, Mich., a day's ho has been all over the United States.

Upon receipt of the despatch from Albany stating that the Scholastic county authorities had arrested a suspect thought to be Girard, Detective Sergeant Sam Price, who has charge of the case, sent Detective Sergeant Barlow last night to Central Bridge. Barlow knows Girard and will be able to identify him if it prove true that he is the man who hid in the woods near Central Bridge, and who said to have marks of teeth on one of his fingers.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—The Italian censor stopped a despatch from THE STW correspondent at Rome announcing that the King intended to appoint as Senator Mgr. LOOTED SUBWAY TAVERN.

Moorish Curtains and U. S. Currency Reported Missing—Mystery of the Bars.

Some time between the closing hour Saturday night and first drink time yesterday morning some villain, unawed by the odor of sanctity that still lingers around the Subway Tavern, got in and removed two Moorish curtains valued at $50, and $110, Saturday's earnings, from the safe. Julius Adams, the skilled medicine man of the Tavern, is authority for the statement that the $110 was deposited in the safe on Saturday night. The safe was left unlocked because Mr. Johnson, late of the Tavern, forgot to tell the combination to the new manager.

Several panes of glass are missing from the windows leading to the basement restaurant and although the windows are guarded by iron bars only six inches apart it is believed that the thief was so ashamed of his job that he slunk sufficiently to get in between them.

The only clue besides the broken window was found scrawled upon a bit of paper stuck in the top of an empty bottle on the bar.

It reads: "The Bishop and the water car are gone. 'Tis no longer sacrilege to monkey with the Rev. A. F. Tenney, Editor Temple Emmet, 100 West 14th Street, New York City. So we think it rather funny to gather in the money."

SHOT ON A FERRYBOAT.

Italian Combat Lends Excitement to Voyage From Staten Island.

About two hundred passengers on the Staten Island ferryboat Southfield were terror stricken on the 7:50 o'clock trip to New York last night when a fight broke out among the members of the Monteforte Alpine Benevolent Society. Thomas Pascaleo of 18 Minetta Lane was taken to the Hudson Street Hospital, shot twice in the groin, several women fainted and men were hurt in the rush to get to the other end of the boat.

The members of the society held
