FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL. MONDAY, March 19. The declining tendency which from the beginning to the end of business characterized to-day's stock market was quite unexplained by any new financial development.

Investment Securities Foreign Exchange Letters of Credit Commission orders executed in the Boston Market. The volume of trading in the market was somewhat, although not exceedingly, larger than the average daily amount maintained last week; and no doubt a considerable portion of the weakness displayed was due to the operations of speculators for the decline, who, seeing that the buying power of the market was limited and having previously reduced their own commitments, were encouraged to once more attack values.

As the day advanced there were more rumors put into circulation of the illness or death of other important members of the world, all of these being absurd and partaking solely of the character of the idle tales usually set afloat in Wall Street to account for the course of a stock market which is weak for no well established or obvious reason.
