

PROBLEMS FOR SUN READERS

A GOOD DEFENSE OVERLOOKED BY BRIDGE EXPERTS.

The Trick in Problem No. 81. Arithmetical Sharpe Asras as to a Farmer's Cows sudden Ending of a Yachtsman.

The question in bridge problem No. 81 was apparently how to make four across each four kings and leave two out of three queens good for tricks.

The correct play is for Z to start with the queen of spades, which covers with the four-ace and Y wins with the ace.

Now if Z discards a diamond on the trump lead the solution must be varied because when Y tries to put A in with the spade it is Z who wins the trick.

Several started with the ace of hearts and then made Y trump the second round with the ace and put A in with the losing trump.

Those who made Y win the first trick when diamonds were led thought he should get two rounds of trumps.

TWO DAYS IN ARKANSAS CITY.

A Moral Lesson Not to Swat a Stranger in the Jaw Without Provocation.

One of the chief characteristics of life in Arkansas City during the years that followed the opening of a saloon in that community by old man Greenlaw was the uncertainty as to what might happen.

Whatever the result, old man Greenlaw and his cronies were never surprised. Pleased or indignant they might be, but never shocked or astonished.

It was therefore with unmovable countenance that they observed the actions of a stranger who came down the levee from the steamboat landing toward them.

"I was lookin' fr Abner Hostetter," said the stranger.

"How come he jabbed him?" asked Sam Pearsall.

"Man bothered him talkin' too much," said old man Greenlaw simply.

A LITTLE POKER WAS A DANGEROUS THING

Two Occasions Which Show the Possibilities of the Game of Stud.

"A knowledge of draw poker is a handy thing to have in the house," said the garage man.

"Personally I have had cause to be grateful that I was impressed by the truth of that statement early in life.

"I never played stud poker but once after that, though, and that one game was the last I ever played with anyone.

"I didn't think much of faro, but I had almost determined to try my luck at it when I turned in at the door of a second rate temple of chance.

PERFUMES FROM THE GARDEN.

The Use of Flowers to Make Individual Scents.

Scents making represents a favorite garden hobby of the moment.

There may be a predominant smell of verbena or of carnations, but probably four or five different blossoms have gone to make up the result.
