

and Gen. Savoff, the Bulgarian commander in chief, met and conferred in the village of Tchataldja yesterday, presumably in reference to the armistice.

The result of the conference is not known, but on Saturday the Turkish lines Nazim Pasha received the Porte's order to continue the war.

Varying versions of the allies' demands continue to be issued. The latest version, coming from Constantinople, says that they ask the surrender of Adrianople and Scutari, the withdrawal of the Turkish fleet from the Black Sea, a cessation of reinforcing the troops and fortifying the Tchataldja lines.

This is considerably less than some of the earlier versions, according to which the allies demanded the complete surrender of the Tchataldja lines and the army there, and in addition to their other claims asked Turkey to give up Macedonia and Albania.

WONT MUTILATE TURKEY.

Special Cable Dispatch to The Sun. BERNY, Nov. 21.—A German, Nizam Pasha, the Turkish peace plenipotentiary, in an interview to-night said that he greatly regretted having been chosen as a negotiator with the allies. The Ambassador believes that the Ottoman position is in no wise hopeless enough to compel Turkey to sue for peace.

Another thing that puzzled was the fact that the boy said he was arrested at 15th street and Seventh avenue and yet he was taken to a station house which is of another district than the one he said he was arrested in.

Those who questioned the Wilkerson boy last night believed that if he was not telling the truth, he had let his imagination wander along some path suggested perhaps by a moving picture show.

"They took me to a police station on 12th street near Morningstar avenue," he said. "We went up steps, and up high was something big and green and inside was a big room. Over at one side was a sort of porch and behind it was a man. I asked my name and the other boys' too. Then they put us in a room a little bigger than this one. There were three cots in it. The cop told me to go to sleep. I went to sleep. I woke up at 12 o'clock and found the other boys and a stump, said Gus, meaning a nightstick.

Then, Gus said, he had been turned out of the station early in the morning. He had followed a rickshaw's wagon around 12th street to Lenox avenue, where he found a street sign. He knew this street and found his way home. He had been with Mrs. Farrington, said she and her husband were up most of the night searching for the boy, who had been left with them by his mother and father, who were in Bermuda. She said she had given her nephew an errand to do after he got out of St. Mark's school at 50 West 13th street, and that just after school closed at 4 o'clock he started for 238 West 13th street, where the errand took him.

"I went through 13th street because I know the boys on 13th street were rough," he said. "At 13th and Seventh avenue I stopped to look at a house. A cop came and took three big boys who had built it and as they took me to the station. He done it too, so he took me.

A sister who has Gus in her class at a school said yesterday that he was one of her best boys. She said she had been told by Mayor Gaynor telling the boy's story. The Mayor replied that he would like to question the boy and yesterday Mrs. Farrington took him down to the City Hall. The letter Mayor Gaynor sent to Commissioner Waldo follows in part:

The law expressly requires that when an officer arrests anybody he must take him before a Magistrate. The police cannot arrest people and confine them and then discharge them without taking them to a Magistrate. That is done only in countries that are still under despotism. Every one arrested in this country must be taken before a Magistrate so that the officer may justify the arrest.

If the story of this boy and his aunt is true the case is a very outrageous one and the members of the force who are responsible for it should be severely punished. If they do not yet know that such treatment of boys is not permitted in this city had better get off the force or be put off and the sooner the better.

"I am sure that the boy was arrested because he had been with some boys made a fire in the street. Even though this boy was one of them he nevertheless could not be treated in this illegal manner, but it is very doubtful if he had anything at all to do with the making of the fire. If he did why was he not taken before a Magistrate? The failure to take him before a Magistrate alone is a grave offense against the law. This being a matter concerning the welfare of the city and the whole force, it had better be made public to treat boys this way is to make criminals of them.

DID SMALL BERMUDA BOY HOAX MAYOR GAYNOR?

Either That or There is a Vacancy in the Police Records.

MAYOR WRITES TO WALDO

Youngster's Story of Abuse by Police Sworn To and Sent With Letter.

An eight-year-old West Indian boy, Gus Wilkerson, said his aunt's flat at 10 West 13th street last night and told records in his own way that he had been taken in tow by a policeman a week ago because he had something to do with a street bonfire, and with three other boys was marched to the West 12th street station, kept all night without food and sent away in the morning with a beating.

The same story had already been told to Mayor Gaynor by the boy's aunt, Mrs. Aurelia Farrington, and was the cause of the Mayor's sending to Police Commissioner Waldo a sharp letter accompanied by affidavits of the boy and Mrs. Farrington.

But in spite of the lad's simple and unshaken story there was some ground last night for the belief that he had hoaxed everybody from the Mayor down. At the West 12th street station no record could be found of any boy having been arrested or brought to the station on November 13 the date he named. Inspector Sweeney had the records of all the Harlem police stations taken before Commissioner Waldo, but they shed no light on the boy's story. Nor could Lieut. McDermott or Doorman Nash or even Capt. Thompson, who patrol the 12th street station clear up the matter.

Another thing that puzzled was the fact that the boy said he was arrested at 15th street and Seventh avenue and yet he was taken to a station house which is of another district than the one he said he was arrested in.

Those who questioned the Wilkerson boy last night believed that if he was not telling the truth, he had let his imagination wander along some path suggested perhaps by a moving picture show.
