CHURCH LIVES TIGHTEN, HE SAYS

Canon of Westminster Tells Ministers of English Confederation. Seventy ministers attended a luncheon of the Clerical Conference yesterday in the Hotel Savoy, at which Bishop Boyd-Carpenter, canon of Westminster, London, was the guest of honor.

Talking on clerical topics for the most part, Bishop Boyd-Carpenter said: "There is much talk in England, as here, of church unity, and many earnest people on both sides, established and not, have their consciences stirred. My observation is, however, that the lines between the two great branches in England—the Established and the Non-conformist—are becoming more tense."

"I do not say I rejoice to see this so. I only state what seems to be a fact. The lines of separation were always more distinctly drawn in England than in America, but the lines will surely here more readily than there. It seems to me they are not vanishing there, but getting higher."

Why this is so need not, I think, be traced to the fact that the English are in their views. It may be caused by quite another reason and, honestly speaking, I think it is. Knowledge is widespread and deep, and it is well it is so. Piety is revived, but education must go along with it. As men are better educated they know more of divine truth, and the more they know the more they value truth. Valuing it intensely and having consciences they are more loath than formerly to let anything they deem truth go."

Others who spoke were Bishop Courtney, the Rev. Dr. Strong and the Rev. Dr. Carhugh. The luncheon was a tribute to an Established parson, arranged by what may be called American Nonconformists, attended by an equal number of Episcopalian in proportion to others, which was pointed to by some as showing more Christian unity than the Bishop gave credit for.

ANOTHER ASTOR GUARDIAN.

A. G. McLaughlin to Look After Marcella's Interests.

Supreme Court Justice Kapper in Brooklyn yesterday appointed lawyer Alonzo G. McLaughlin of 19 William street, Manhattan, as guardian of ten-year-old Ava Alice Marcella Astor, sister of Vincent Astor and daughter of the late John Jacob Astor, in a partition suit brought in Kings county.

Justice Blackman recently appointed ex-Justice Gildersleeve as guardian for John Jacob Astor, the baby son of Mrs. John Jacob Astor, in the same proceeding. Mr. McLaughlin is president of the Brooklyn Democratic Club.

HOW VOTES FOR WOMEN WON OUT IN MOUNTAINS

Miss Caroline Lexow Carried Glad Tidings Into Hills in Faces of Mere Men. GUARDED BY OPPONENTS

Schoolgirls Took Up Cry and Formed Club and Now Boys Are Helping.

Miss Caroline Lexow temporarily abandoned her home town, Nyack, to its fate the other day and came down to New York to swap experiences with the New York suffrage workers. Miss Lexow has campaigned through Rockland and Dutchess counties, a region where it is the easiest thing in the world to put fifteen miles between oneself and a lemon, or any other symbol of civilization.

It is up in the mountains of that section that the famous Jackson whites live. It was from those mountains that threatening letters were sent to Woodrow Wilson. And the disposition of the male inhabitants of certain districts are generally conducted, says Miss Lexow, to the accompaniment of a warning jangle of shackles by the sheriff, just to remind the audience not to get too peevish.

Little Miss Lexow, however, is of a hardihood quite out of proportion to her size. Therefore, undismayed by the local intemperance of politics and the fierceness, she decided that the message of "votes for women" should be conveyed to the benighted back country men and that she would be the one to convey it.

Right here is where Miss Lexow qualifies as a woman of political genius. Not caring to make her suffrage speeches to the accompaniment of a handclap obnoxious school would be tumultuous and other way of administering a quietus to the mountaineer's mania for barking and biting.

This is what she did: She got the sheriff to appoint as his deputies the leading barkers and biters themselves, and to entrust them with the responsibility of maintaining order at the meetings. Eureka! She had it! An ordinary school would be tumultuous and other way of administering a quietus to the mountaineer's mania for barking and biting.

That these seeds were sprouting in unexpected places was proved by recent developments in the hamlet of Valley Cottage. The name of this village would seem to indicate that it contained only one house. That is a mistake. There are at least four within the radius to which an ordinary suffragette voice would carry. And one of these edifices is the district school.

On a memorable morning not long ago, six little girls foregathered at this sanctuary of rural scholarship and, while waiting for the teacher to arrive, began to discuss the grand new talk about the female sex, which had filtered in to them from the outside world. Miss Lillian Ness, who seems to have in her the stuff of future Madam Presidents are made, then and there organized the Valley Cottage Suffrage Club and enrolled every mother's daughter present.

It is a really truly club. It meets every week and the members make suffrage speeches to beat the band. As usual, this effort toward emancipation was treated at first with the common brand of contempt by the Valley Cottage future voters. But these are parlous times when a future voter can be snatched back with a remark like: "You needn't think you're so smart! We're future voters ourselves!"

That, in effect, is what Lillian Ness and her suffrage sisters told the Johnnies and Jimmies of Valley Cottage, and they backed it up with so much literature, kindly supplied by the big suffrage sisters outside, that the boys concluded it was time to get in line.

So the latest news from the Valley Cottage schoolhouse is that a Men's League is in the throes of formation. When it is organized, there will be a joint parade which, in proportion to the population, will have the New York efforts beaten to a standstill.
