

BELASCO'S NEW PLAY DEPICTS ARTIST'S LIFE

His Hero Found Fame Only After He Was Thought to Be Dead.

ADAPTED FROM FRENCH

Leo Dittrichstein Acts Principal Role in "A Temperamental Journey."

"The Temperamental Journey"—At the Belasco.

Leo Dittrichstein, Prof. Babcock Holman, Henry Bergman, Vernon Nell, Frank Connor, Billy Shepherd, Richie Ling, Edward Durand, Howard Lockwood, Julian Little, Carrington Mitchell, Lee Hill, Delphine, Isobel Irving, Marie, Josephine Victor, Fanny Lamont, Cora Whitford, Teresa.

The Belasco Theatre was opened for the season last night by its respected director, the unique David, with a new play from the French, Leo Dittrichstein, who also acted the principal role in the new work, made the adaptation from "Pour un Heureux" by Andre Rivoire and Yves Mirande and called what was seen last night "The Temperamental Journey."

There has been some preliminary discussion as to the work in reference to its striking resemblance to another drama about to be acted. Its theme is the greater fame that sometimes comes to a man after his supposed death than he could ever enjoy during his lifetime.

But there have been other pieces than "The Temperamental Journey" and "The Great Adventure" founded on the same idea. One of these was "Heartsease," which J. I. C. Clarke, who was in the audience last night, wrote with Charles Klein for Henry Miller years ago, and there was acted almost simultaneously in Germany "Nachruhm," which, like the American play, dealt with the reputation that came to a composer after he had presumably passed out of existence. Was not the story of Amelia B. Edwards's old novel, "Lord Brackenbury," similar, or did the hero of that book surrender his high place in the world only because he was weary of the pomp and circumstances it involved and longed for a simpler way of life?

At all events "The Temperamental Journey" need not be judged on any other qualities than those it revealed last night. Its hero was an artist who refused to sacrifice his ideals for material success. So he is in the first act unappreciated by all but a few friends, unhappy with his wife, so little respected that the discerning dealers refuse to pay even a pittance for his work, and he goes for consolation to a small town in France. When he reappears in the last act it is to sell as his earlier pictures what he has painted during this period. So great has their value become that he finds the painter who has married trying to sell forgeries as his own canvases. Then he reveals himself and as his former wife already has a second husband, not to mention the fact that he has a young son, the painter has to marry her and she is able to appreciate the love of the young artist who has been so tenderly devoted.

The three acts are entertaining, the atmosphere of the artistic group is fresh and well sustained, and there are some incidents unusual both in humor and in sentiment. In the second act, for instance, the model, who has been to the country to see the artist, is seen in a scene with the man she loves, finds that they have been forgotten and goes to the studio of the artist who had promised to place them on the pier.

Labels for admission in vain, since the man for whom she had collected them is in the room and will not be seen. She knocks and calls, but the friend with whom she has been so long separated does not hear her. Finally her appeal is too much for the painter who has come back from the dead and he opens the door softly to tell her the truth. But she has seen the man and goes away without learning that he is not dead.

Azain in this act there is the humor that comes from the cynical comments of the map who sits at the studio waiting for the sympathetic and loving model, and some of the interesting types that surround the hero. It was perhaps their novelty and their unusual setting which made the audience take so kindly to all these characters and find so much that was amusing in what they said and did. More than once it was not evident to just what sentiment the author and the actors meant to appeal. This lack of distinctness in connection with a certain fullness of action interfered with the effectiveness of certain scenes. Yet the general delight which the play afforded was not seriously diminished by these faults, and the play will not interfere with the future prosperity of "The Temperamental Journey."

Leo Dittrichstein gave an amusing and at times poignantly human portrayal of the unappreciated artist, and it is unfortunate that his extreme deliberation of method seems at times to rob his acting of spontaneity. Josephine Victor, who wears so richly endowed with talent by nature that under her present director she will cross day travel far on the road to fame, made a touching study of the faithful model or pupil.

Mr. Irving relentlessly and naturally revealed the traits of the selfish wife who was on with a new love within a few days after the first had supposedly been removed.

Henry Bergman, Frank Connor, Richie Ling and Edward Durand presented realistic artistic types, and Julian Little, who has just come to the theatre from another direction, revealed with the slightest of touches a fitness for his new profession and an aggressive personality. Mr. Ling accomplished an especially human and touching bit of acting in the recognition of the friend whom he thought dead.

There was in the new play the customary taste of the Belasco productions, and it may also be said the customary Belasco success.

NEW PLAY FROM NOVEL. Klav & Erlanger Present "The Winning of Barbara Worth."

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 4.—Klav & Erlanger presented "The Winning of Barbara Worth" for the first time on any stage at the Apollo Theatre to-night before a large audience. The company was large in number and exceptionally capable. "The Winning of Barbara Worth" is a play in a prologue and three acts by Edwin Milton Royle from the story of the same title by Harold Bell Wright. Miss Edith Lyle, a young San Francisco actress, was Barbra Worth, and the cast were Claude Gillingwater, Richard Gordon, Frazier Coulter, Ralph Theodore and E. J. Blunkhull.

Plays and Players. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, assisted by Jack Clifford, will begin her tour of America in Toronto on September 29 in a farce with music, by Mark E. Swan, called "The Girl in the Green Mask." Besides Mr. Clifford, Mrs. Thaw will have a supporting company of players and a chorus of twenty girls. The tour, which is under the direction of F. Ray Constock and Morris Geat, is booked to last forty-five weeks and to include practically every city of prominence in the United States and Canada.

John Mason will begin rehearsals under Augustus Thomas's direction in the latter's play "Indian Summer" next Monday. Besides Miss Martha Hedman the cast will include Mary Norton, Walter Hale, Louis Payne, Warner P. Richmond, Amelia Gardner, Harry Leighton and Creighton Hall.

Charles Frohman has decided upon next Thursday night for William Collier's first New York performance in "Who's Who?" so as to insure Mr. Collier an opening date which will not conflict with that of any other play.

The regular season at the Gayety Theatre will begin to-night with the presentation of Edgar Selwyn's farce "Nearly Married," with Bruce McRae and a cast that includes Jane Grey, Ruth Shepley, Virginia Pearson, Georgia Lawrence, John L. Westley, Schuyler Ladd, Mark Smith, Robert Fisher, William Phinney and Mabel Acton.

KAKUZO OKAKURA.

Oriental Curator of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. Special Cable Despatch to New York. TOKIO, Sept. 4.—Kakuzo Okakura, Oriental curator of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, died here to-day. He was 51 years old.

BOSTON, Sept. 4.—Kakuzo Okakura was very well known in the United States, particularly in Boston, where he served as Oriental curator in the Museum of Fine Arts for several years, receiving the appointment in 1907. Beginning his career in the Government Department of Education in charge of musical affairs, he was sent abroad to study art, and on his return was made director of the Fine Arts Academy, which was established as the result of his researches. Owing to a difficulty with the Japanese authorities he resigned in 1899. Then came his appointment to the Boston Museum in 1907. Okakura was an author as well as an art critic, and curiously enough all his published works are in English. Among them may be mentioned "The Intellectual Development of Japan," "Japonisme," "The Ideals of the East."

EX-JUSTICE BROWN PASSES AWAY AT 77

Appointed to a Federal Supreme Bench in 1890.

NOTED IN ADMIRALTY LAW

Sat as a Justice When Blind, and Later Partly Regained His Sight.

Henry Billings Brown, formerly Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, died of heart disease at 11:30 yesterday morning in the Gramatan Inn, Bronxville. He had been critically ill for about ten days, and for several years had been subject to attacks of heart trouble. Justice Brown was traveling in the Eastern States for several weeks prior to his illness. He went to the Gramatan Inn with his wife and his niece, Mrs. E. E. Warren, wife of the United States Senator from Wyoming. When he became ill, Dr. Charlton of Bronxville was called in. Dr. Evan Evans of this city, a specialist, was also called. Justice Brown, however, grew worse. His wife and niece were with him when he died.

Funeral Will Be in Detroit.

The body was brought to this city last evening and was shipped to Detroit on a midnight train. The funeral will be held in that city next Sunday afternoon. Justice Brown's home was in Washington, where he lived for more than twenty-five years.

Former Justice Brown had lived in Washington since he left the bench. He had taken an active interest in the work of the Lincoln Memorial Association, the George Washington Memorial Association and other patriotic organizations with which he was connected. Justice Brown was a Republican. He was appointed to the Supreme bench by President Harrison, who had practiced before Mr. Brown when he was a United States Judge in Michigan.

The jurist was born in South Lee, Mass., seventy-seven years ago last March 6. Of late years he had suffered from failing eyesight. Justice Brown had been twice married. He married his first wife, Caroline Pratt, in 1857. She died in 1891 and he married Josephine E. Tyler in 1904. She survives him.

Rendered Noteworthy Opinion.

Justice Brown was one of the pioneers in declaring what he conceived to be the dangerous effect of the growth of wealth on popular government. He voiced the sentiment in his remarkable dissenting opinion from the income tax decision, by which the Supreme Court by one majority held the laws of 1894 to be unconstitutional. Every opinion held by Justice Brown came to him by appointment. He began as a deputy United States marshal in 1861 and later was assistant United States attorney for the eastern district of Michigan. He served a few months as a Circuit Court Judge for Wayne county, which comprises the western part of the State, before he practiced law in Detroit until 1875, when President Grant made him Federal Judge for the eastern district of Michigan. He was appointed to the Supreme Court by the Federal bench on December 23, 1890. Mr. Brown was distinguished as an admiralty lawyer and as the compiler of "Brown's Admiralty Reports." He received the degree of Doctor of Law from the University of Michigan and from Yale. He retired from the United States Supreme bench on May 28, 1906.

Was Blind While a Justice.

While serving on the bench of the Supreme Court his sight failed him and he was advised by one of the most eminent specialists of the country that he would be totally blind for the remainder of his life. After gravely considering the matter and conferring with his colleagues on the bench Justice Brown decided that although blind it was a relative necessity for him to leave the bench for the time being and he accepted his infirmity with that same philosophy which has characterized his life. Months afterward with a joy that was unexpressed he told some of his friends that he believed his sight was returning. He was not disappointed, for gradually his eyes resumed their functions and in recent years he was able to recognize his friends and to read, although he seldom ventured out unattended.

Dead After a Fate of 56 Days.
