

REDS GO UP 5TH AVE. CURSING "THE RICH"

Anarchist Army Shoves Women From Sidewalk, Hurling Insults.

FEW POLICE JUST LOOK ON Marchers Shake Fists at Clubs and Churches—Auto Party Spat Upon.

Fifth avenue had a good look at New York's unemployed anarchists yesterday afternoon. Five hundred of them followed a black flag inscribed in red from Union square to 107th street, elbowing throngs of women from the sidewalk and hurling epithets at the massive Fifth avenue edifices and well dressed passersby.

The march was planned by Alexander Berkman, Emma Goldman, Carlo Treves and other anarchist leaders. There was no interference from the police.

A meeting in Union Square from 1 o'clock to 2 o'clock started the demonstration. A dozen speakers exhorted the crowd to stop asking for food and to fight for it. Then Alexander Berkman told them to march in line and march to the Francisco Ferrer School, 63 East 107th street, where they would be fed and lodged.

Dirty John W. W. followers and hangers on of the Fifth avenue at Twenty-third street, some one unfurled a big black flag inscribed in red, "De la Revolution," and the crowd followed it up the avenue shouting, and showing their contempt through the mid-afternoon shopping crowds.

Women drew into doorways or retreated to the other side of the avenue. Through the bustling streets and avenues there were uniformed policemen with the marchers except an occasional traffic officer, who viewed the parade with amusement.

At sixty-sixth street a squad under the command of the sergeant of the East Sixty-seventh street station, hustled the marchers from the sidewalk, but they continued unmolested in the street with the police in the lead.

Traffic from the cross streets was not allowed to break the line. At Eighty-fourth street two women and a man in an automobile were held up by the marchers. As the automobile was ordered to break through the line by one of the women occupants there were cries of "Down with capitalism" and a woman who was marching near Alexander Berkman spat three times at the woman in the car. There were no arrests and the car got away before being identified.

The anarchists marched past Fifth avenue's famous clubs, churches and stores shouting "Down with parasites! To hell with the churches!" "Three cheers for Tannenbaum." They treated their audience to several verses from the "Reds" of the city, "Hallelujah, I'm a bum!" At the Metropolitan Club they made a special demonstration, shaking their fists and cursing.

The anarchist leaders were happy over the success of the demonstration. It was a triumph march up Fifth avenue, a section of the city they have never invaded in broad daylight before, according to Marshall Unger, the city leader.

A cash with the police would have made the glory of the leaders complete. They had been expecting a clash and were a little disappointed when it did not come. Each of the leaders at the Union Square meeting carried a bunch of red cards conveying the information that in case the police suppressed the meeting there, the card were to gather again as soon as possible at Cooper Square. The cards were saved for another time.

A dozen girls with red badges collected $145 from the crowd at the meeting. The money was turned over to Emma Goldman, who had contributed $5 of it. She put it into a handkerchief and left. The girls were given stamps, which were apportioned off for 10 cents.

SINCLAIR OUSTED FROM ARDEN. Head of Single Tax Colony Sells Author's Dwelling, "Jungalo."

PHILADELPHIA, March 21.—Peace has been restored in the single tax community of Arden, Del., and Frank Stephens, its original founder, becomes supreme dictator of its ideas on feminism.

Last week Mr. Stephens found a buyer for the Jungalo, a pretty plaster dwelling belonging to Union Sinclair, the author. Sinclair said he was a bit peeved at Stephens's suggestion, and was willing to return the property if the police do not press too closely, caused the police to believe they are at least near the solution of the disappearance of Warren McCarrick, the seven-year-old son of a city employe, from in front of his home Thursday a week ago.

They took wrong lead. Detectives have been sent to Norristown in an effort to locate the kidnappers and recover the boy. The letter was found on a road near Norristown by Howard Wharton, a negro pugilist.

Wharton says he found the letter yesterday afternoon. He came here this morning to give it to the police. The letter was not enclosed in an envelope, but was in good condition. It had evidently been placed in the middle of the road a short time before, in the expectation that it would be seen and read. The writing was in ink and was almost illegible. At the top of the note was a crude black hand, and at the bottom another black hand appeared, with the word "death" in the opposite corner. The letter was dated "Philadelphia, March 19" and read:

"DEAR SIR: To whom it may concern: The order of this note are on the trail of the little fellow we lost in mistake. He is getting along good, but is not the one we wanted. They will place him on his way homeward some day. The Black Hand. Don't try to run, or to hide, for this our last stand. We will kill him. (The inference being that, if molested before they had a chance to release the boy, his death would follow.)"

"P. S. We want the right boy, and we are going to get him. It is our last chance. Hell be his doom." This was written underneath the name, with a black hand and the word "death." On the reverse side of the sheet of paper was written what appeared to be signatures: "Tony, Don, Mick, Alice, Chief." Another clue to the possible whereabouts of the boy was received shortly after noon today.

Samuel Mehra of 105 West Columbia avenue reported to the police at the Delaware Ferry that a few minutes before he had seen a boy in the company of a man board a car at Camden station for Clementon, N. J. He was positive the lad was Warren McCarrick, who disappeared last week. "This man," said Mehra, "was about 40 or 45 years old. He had gray hair and wore a gray overcoat. In my pocket I had a newspaper showing Warren McCarrick's photograph and made careful comparison of child and picture. I am positive he was the missing boy."

"There was no policeman near and I spoke to the driver of the car. He called the conductor from the car and told him to see where the man got off and if necessary to leave his car and follow him to discover his destination. Then I took the ferryboat for Philadelphia."

Police were sent from this city and Camden to search for the man and boy described by Mehra. Two detectives dug around several building operations in the southern part of the city to-day, following the theory that the lad either had been covered up by a cavern of earth in one of the newly dug cellars or had been killed and buried there. This action was taken after a shovel had been discovered in the cellar of a man who had been under suspicion. The shovel was coated with mud as if from recent digging.

DEATH THREAT FOR LOST M'CARRICK BOY FROM FRANK VOGEL

Letter Found on Roadway Adds to Philadelphia's Kidnapping Mystery.

THEY TOOK WRONG LEAD. DEPOSITORS STAND FIRM. But "Black Hand" Note Says He Is Doomed if Police Press Band.

PHILADELPHIA, March 21.—The discovery to-day near Norristown, of a "Black Hand" letter, in which the writers declare they took the wrong boy and are willing to return their captive if the police do not press too closely, caused the police to believe they are at least near the solution of the disappearance of Warren McCarrick, the seven-year-old son of a city employe, from in front of his home Thursday a week ago.

BRITONS BALK AT SCHOOL LAW. One Wants Daughter to Work; the Other Objects to It. NEWARK, N. J., March 21.—Two British school boys who refuse to send their children to school got into a Bible to-day. Robert Holder, a native of the West Indies, explained in the police court that he feared his son would have to swear allegiance to the flag of the United States. Arthur Evans, another native of the West Indies, told the court why he did not send his daughter to school. A bench warrant was issued for his arrest.

When Holder was told his son would not have to swear allegiance to the flag, he said the boy did not have good enough clothes to wear. The court said the Board of Education would provide clothes, but Holder declared he would not accept charity. He was ordered to send the boy to school within a week.

Evans was fined $10 a short time ago for not sending his daughter to school. The Bureau of Social Hygiene, which offered to pay Evans a weekly amount equal to the wage of his daughter if he would send her to school. He refused the offer, and a new complaint was made against him.

NOTHING HEARD YET FROM FRANK VOGEL

Telegram Explaining Absence at Siegel Hearing Has Not Arrived.

DEPOSITORS STAND FIRM. To Issue Ultimatum To-morrow—Aged Family Loses Only Means of Support.

PHILADELPHIA, March 21.—The telegram which Frank E. Vogel is supposed to have sent to ex-Judge Holt on Friday explaining his absence from United States Commissioner Gilchrist's hearing on the failure of the bank of Henry Siegel & Co. did not materialize yesterday.

Vogel's whereabouts was still a mystery, but Commissioner Gilchrist is satisfied that the indicted merchant will show up to-morrow afternoon, when he is next wanted.

Levy Mayer, his lawyer, said in Chicago on Friday night that Vogel was so ill that he sent a wire to New York to accuse himself, but neither Commissioner Gilchrist nor Special Master Holt has got any word from him within a week.

It is believed that the Commissioner's prompt action in declaring Vogel in contempt of court until he produces sworn evidence of his illness balked a plan to keep him from testifying with his partner, Siegel, or at least to put off the hearing until some future date.

The depositors at the failed bank, through their new counsel, Samuel Hoffman, have called an all day meeting to-morrow at Labor Temple. Hoffman said yesterday that he intends to put through a resolution that will be a practical ultimatum to all others concerned in the Siegel and Vogel failures.

Just what the nature of it will be he would not say, but he is expected to be the depositors' final stand on the settlement figure to be offered by the mercantile creditors and will be the basis for their acceptance or rejection of the bids and settlement to be arranged at the conference of the creditors of the Siegel stores in the Federal building on Wednesday.

Hoffman has secured the signatures of upward of 500 of the depositors to an agreement with him whereby he gets 1 per cent of whatever he collects on their claims against the bank. He declared yesterday that he would express their opposition to the proposal that Supt. Van Tuyl of the Banking Department act as trustee and recover whatever is possible without cost to the depositors.

Extremes among the depositors were unheated yesterday in the case of Arthur Speier, 19 years old, of 638 Caldwell avenue, The Bronx, and the family of August Albert, 75 years old, of 33 Seventh street.

Speier opened an account in the Siegel bank on July 6, 1909. His last deposit was $2 on November 8, 1913, making a total in the account of $11.11. His wife and child were members of the American Bankers Association, in use before the association dropped Siegel and Vogel from its membership.

Albert, his wife, 32 years old, and unmarried daughter, 29 years old, had $21,000 in the closed bank. They were three of the largest depositors and lived on the income, which amounted to $14.50 a week. The whole fortune was wiped out by the failure, along with the family's only means of support.

Boston, March 21.—Referee Olmstead declared to-day a dividend of 10 per cent cash to the unsecured creditors of the Henry Siegel Company of Boston, which will take about $100,000 of the cash in the hands of the bankrupt estate.
