

GIRL'S SUIT AGAINST HOE TO JURY TO-DAY

Her Lawyer Calls Rich Man "Wolf"—His Says He's Serving Public.

QUICK VERDICT EXPECTED

Miss Sullivan Goes on Stand to Repeat Ugly Charge Against Ho.

The attorneys summed up yesterday in the trial of the $225,000 breach of promise suit of Miss M. A. Sullivan against Arthur Ingersoll-Hoe.

Hoe and Miss Sullivan were portrayed to the jury by Mirabeau Towne, counsel for the plaintiff, and by William H. Hamilton, attorney for the defendant, as follows:

McDonough's Wife Volunteered.

The first witness called yesterday was Mrs. Esther Louise McDonough of 108 Northern avenue, wife of Henry Russell McDonough, manager of moving picture theatres, who explained that she volunteered her evidence for the defence because she had read that Miss Sullivan had testified to being in a party of four that made a trip to Albany and had said that McDonough, husband of the witness, was the drunk party.

When Miss Sullivan was called in rebuttal by her attorney she insisted that she first met Ho at Fifty-third street and Fifth avenue, on Twenty-third street near Second avenue, as stated by Ho and Mrs. Dorothy Brannigan Campion.

Girl Explains Break With Ho.

In explaining why she refused to have anything more to do with Ho in June, 1913, and sued him, Miss Sullivan said: "Ho told me that he was broke and could give me no more money. He suggested that I go into a bad house and said he could put me there and then I could make all the money I wanted. Of course I scorned the suggestion."

HEIRESS IN DIVORCE MUDDLE.

Wife of Miss Magill's Chauffeur to File Cross Bill.

The divorce suit of Walter Mayor, chauffeur for Miss Eleanor Magill of Jersey City, who inherited a $1,000,000 estate from her father, Dr. John D. Magill, took a new turn yesterday when Mayor's wife asked leave of Vice-Chancellor Lewis to file a cross bill charging infidelity.

RIVAL "ANGELS" AID SEARS IN WIFE'S DIVORCE FIGHT

Miss Langdon, Named as Correspondent, on Stand at Trial Too.

Miss Pauline Langdon.

Miss Pauline Langdon, actress and belle in the New Thought cult, is named as correspondent in the divorce suit brought by Dr. Julia Seton Sears, New Thought leader, against Frank W. Sears, head of a rival congregation, and who was involved in the case through the detective work done by Dr. Julia Sears's "ministering angels," was suddenly called to the witness stand yesterday before Supreme Court Justice O'Sullivan and a jury by counsel for Mrs. Sears.

Miss Langdon, who was in court lending moral support to the defence of Mr. Sears, was beginning to grow in a white summer dress and wore a poke bonnet tied with blue strings.

"What is your profession?" asked Edward W. Hiscok, attorney for Mrs. Sears. "I have none," replied the witness. "It is my pleasure to give my time and efforts to the New Thought church and school."

Miss Langdon squared herself in her chair, and in response to any questions, but she was asked only to tell of the arrangement of her suite of rooms at the Hotel Maryland, where three members of Mrs. Sears's church, who said they had banded together as Mrs. Sears's "ministering angels" to seek evidence for her, watched for two hours, they said, while the accused husband was inside with Miss Langdon.

Had "Ministering Angels" Too.

The testimony yesterday developed the fact that the Rev. Mr. Sears had a flock of "ministering angels" of his own who were giving him their sympathy in his marital troubles and also giving him money. This appeared from the statements of Mrs. Harry S. Collins, a witness for the defendant, who said that 200 members of the Harmony Club of Mr. Sears's New Thought congregation took up a collection for the pastor last summer so that he could take a trip abroad.

"Who provided the money for Miss Langdon?" asked counsel for Mrs. Sears. "I don't know," replied Mrs. Collins. "I suppose she paid for the trip herself."

Mrs. Collins said that there was trouble in the Sears household long before the defendant met Miss Langdon. She told of a talk she had with Dr. Julia Sears in 1907.

Like Honeymoon, She Says.

"Miss Langdon looked up at Mr. Sears, right into his eyes, and he looked into hers," said Miss Connor. "They constantly smiled into each other's faces. They would lock their arms together and hold hands. They seemed exactly like a couple on a honeymoon."

Two depositions relating to the trip Mr. Sears and Miss Langdon took abroad last fall were put in evidence. Arthur Humbert, steward on the Oceanic, on which they returned, said that the defendant was in Miss Langdon's stateroom so much that he understood that he was her physician.

Miss Mary Connor, stewardess on the Leyland liner Canadian, on which the couple sailed from Boston, said that Miss Langdon had her stateroom changed and took on the opposite of the stateroom occupied by Sears. She said the first stateroom, assigned to Miss Langdon was No. 13 and that the young woman asked to have the change made because she was superstitious.

Taxi Man Excites Sears.

The testimony of Morris Gramowitz, a taxicab owner, one of the witnesses for Mrs. Sears, so excited the husband that he jumped to his feet and shouted: "Your Honor, demand the arrest of that scoundrel!"

BOOTBLACKS BANISHED FROM CITY HALL PARK

Their stands and chairs were seized without warning by men of the Park Department and dumped on the sidewalk beside Broadway and on the curb under the Brooklyn Bridge extension.

All were told that they must go—that their licenses, unexpired at the beginning of the year, were revoked. Those who because of their American citizenship or because they personally superintend their business, or whose stands in the opinion of the Park Commissioner and his committee on concessions are best cared for will get new permits, but not in the park.

The owner of two of these shoe shining stands was accused of running a hand-book on the races. Another stand was owned by an interpreter in the Marriage License Bureau, who had been getting $13 a week from his city job and splitting a profit of $16 more with the man who managed his bootblacking business.

street to the Hotel Maryland. He took them to the Park View early in the evening and remained there for the couple until 2 A. M., when he took them to the Maryland, where they had another ride two weeks later.

Miss Louise Fox, member of the choir in Mr. Sears's church, who testified on Monday that she saw the defendant and correspondent spending much time in the "meditation" room near Mr. Sears's pulpit, was asked if the actions of Sears and Miss Langdon had created any talk in church circles and if she had told the defendant about it.

"Yes, I told him people were all discussing the thing and that even Mrs. Sears had heard about it. He said it was nobody's business."

Miss Mary Connor, who said she had followed the defendant and correspondent for two years, was asked what she had noticed about their attitude toward each other.
