

WOMAN THAT SLAYS IN BROADHURST PLAY

Author Gives an American Setting to His "The Law of the Land."

USES MATERIAL AT HAND

"The Law of the Land," at the Forty-ninth Street Theatre.

Arthur Broadhurst... George Graham... Harry Lifford... Charles Lane... Milton Sills... Master Macomber... James Sealey... Ethel Wright... Walter Craven... Thomas... George Fawcett... Harry Oldridge

Admirer of George Broadhurst's plays... knows that he is engaged on a theme of American life, preferably middle class life...

All in Twenty-four Hours. The action of the play takes place in a city of the United States...

In "The Law of the Land" the principal character is the wife of a brutal and violent husband who suspects her of a long sustained love affair with an engineer...

Can a man be so evil that a woman is justified in shooting him down? This is the thesis of the new play...

About to Betray Galt. It is of course, the wife who is suspected. The three acts following the murder are devoted to the pursuit of the criminal...

Deepest Melodrama. Horsepicking proved by a gradual stepping stone to the murder, which ended in an act so steeped in the deepest melodrama...

It was that in the melodrama by the time the curtain had risen to show the elegant and noble bridegroom...

Most interesting throughout. But it was rich in characteristic humor. The police inspector, acted with naturalness and a dry comedy by George Fawcett...

Montgomery and Stone Open. Philadelphia, Sept. 30.—Montgomery and Stone were presented by Charles Dillingham...

Interesting All Along. Mr. Broadhurst's melodrama, in spite of the intense flavor of its opening act, was therefore interesting in most of its scenes...

BARONESS ROMBERG A NURSE AT BERLIN

Husband's Death in War Recalls Stormy Career of Former Miss Converse.

FIRST WED WHEN SIXTEEN. The information printed in THE SUN yesterday that Capt. Baron Maximilian von Romberg, who married Mrs. Walter C. Morrill, the daughter of Edmund C. Converse, had been killed in the fighting at the unusual and generally unhappy events in the recent years of the life of the banker's daughter.

News of the death of Baron von Romberg came from Greenwich, Conn., where Mr. Converse received a cable message from his daughter in Berlin saying that the Baron had been killed in the fighting of September 22. The Baroness at the time was nursing the German wounded at an improvised hospital.

Mrs. Morrill married Baron von Romberg in July, 1907. A year earlier she had obtained a divorce in the Connecticut courts. The divorce was granted on the ground of cruelty and gave to her the custody of her two sons, now 11 and 12 years old respectively.

The two children were the cause of another court action in 1910, when Mr. Morrill made a successful plea before the Connecticut Supreme Court for the right to see the children, but they were then living abroad with their mother and stepfather and it was Morrill's fear, he said, that the boys might lose their "robust Americanized" characteristics.

By the court's decree the boys were to be sent each year to this country for at least six weeks with their father. According to the testimony brought out in the litigation, the children had grown to regard Baron von Romberg as their father. Mr. Morrill said he didn't want them to become Germans.

The marriage of Miss Converse to Morrill in 1900 was the result of a childhood romance. When she was 15 years old and living at her father's place at Greenwich she fell in love with Morrill, a young man of some social standing and member of many clubs. She surprised her father by telling of her engagement, and made his astonishment even greater by saying that they wanted to be married at once.

Morrill was at that time earning a beginner's wage as a clerk in one of Mr. Converse's offices. After the marriage he started a real estate venture. This was not a success. His troubles increased when his conduct did not please his wife, and after quarrels they decided to live apart, she going to her father and he to his mother's place at Cedarhurst, L. I. The separation took place in 1902, when the couple were living at 10 East Seventy-fifth street.

A few months before her divorce suit was started Mrs. Morrill was shot in the neck by John Brown, a hostler on her father's place. Brown was convicted of burglary, but it was also believed that he was acting as the agent of some one who wished to kidnap the Morrill children.

WAR FILMS ARE CENSORED. Pictures Showing Brutality and Dead Cut From Reels. The Universal Film Manufacturing Company gave a private view yesterday afternoon of reels which were said to be the first motion pictures of actual war scenes in Europe. The National Board of Censors, which looks after motion pictures, saw them on Tuesday afternoon and cut out more than 100 feet of film which it considered not advisable to be shown here. The censored parts, it was said yesterday, illustrated alleged brutality in Belgium on the part of the Germans and pictures of dead.
