

HOE ORIENTAL ART STOWOSKIS MUSIC COLLECTION SHOWN AT SPECIAL CONCERT

Rare Paintings, Cloisonne and Three New Compositions by Porcelains on View in Resident Polish Musician American Galleries.

WORKS OF GREAT ARTISTS SYMPHONY: CONCERTOS

Collectors and artists, who sometimes disagree in their attitudes toward works of art, will be sure to find themselves in accord over the Oriental collection of Arthur I. Hoe, now on view in the American Art Association galleries.

The Hoe cloisonne enamel consists of a group of cloisonne and porcelain, with a few pieces of glass, which are the work of the artist. The collection is shown at an auction house of great importance, chiefly by the greatest influence upon the present generation of artists of the entire world.

The Hoe porcelain enamel consists of a group of cloisonne and porcelain, with a few pieces of glass, which are the work of the artist. The collection is shown at an auction house of great importance, chiefly by the greatest influence upon the present generation of artists of the entire world.

Enamels and Porcelains. A tripod censer of the Ch'ien-ling period, of large size, No. 745 is a magnificent specimen of the cloisonne art, and in addition has a cover of gilt open work of most intricate design.

The Hoe porcelain enamel consists of a group of cloisonne and porcelain, with a few pieces of glass, which are the work of the artist. The collection is shown at an auction house of great importance, chiefly by the greatest influence upon the present generation of artists of the entire world.

There are no less than a dozen of his works, all of them highly characteristic and instructive. All of them are of Eastern theme, and the artist's style is that of the tombs of great Sultans, several scenes of women at the bath in which the faultless drawing of the nude is a study of the artist's technique.

COLUMBIA'S BUDGET CLOSE TO $4,000,000

Greatest in History—May Be Largest of Any American University.

96 SALARIES INCREASED

Columbia University trustees approved a budget of nearly $4,000,000 at a meeting yesterday. This is Columbia's largest budget and probably exceeds any budget of an American university. The exact figures show a total of $3,975,350, which is more than $100,000 in excess of the budget for the present academic year.

In spite of this increase the deficit for the year is the smallest in years. It is estimated at $22,997, an amount $700,058. One of the reasons for the reduced deficit is the fact that the new system of fees will go into effect in September, bringing the university a substantial increase in revenues.

Several improvements are contemplated by the trustees in addition to the budget and ninety-six officers receive increases in salaries. The normal university budget totals $2,236,969; Harvard, $1,115,098; Teachers College, $674,578; the College of Pharmacy, $441,212.

Associate Professors: Harvard, politics, Campbell, metallurgy, J. Heywood, German, and Sankhoyee, official history, were promoted to the grade of full professor.

Assistant Professors: Hayes, history; Moseforth, electrical engineering; Kitchin, Teachers College, and Hillegas, Teachers College, were promoted to the grade of associate professor.

Instructors: Elliott, physical education; Finch, civil engineering; Judd, mining; Kenrick, history; Schulze, German; Willhoff, mechanical engineering, and Associate Moss, mechanical engineering, were appointed to be assistant professors.

Edward J. Grant, A. B. 1909, who has been for a number of years chief clerk in the registrar's office, was appointed assistant registrar of the university.

In Teachers College the following new appointments were made: Thomas Henry Briggs to be associate professor of education.
