

MORNING GROOMING FOR REBELS' WIDOWS

Noted Irish Tenor Will Be Heard at the Century Theatre This Evening.

FRIENDS GIVE SERVICES

Despite the fact that John McCormack announced weeks ago that he was through for the season and therefore all packed up and ready to go home to Ireland for the summer, he is going to flash out upon the stage of the Century Theatre to-night and sing as only he can sing at a benefit for the widows and children of the Irishmen who died because of their part in the Dublin rebellion.

Mr. McCormack is going to be the whole concert with the help of Donald McBeath, solo violinist, and Edwin Schneider, accompanist. It may or may not be of interest to the crowd in the Century to-night to know that commercialism enters into the concert not at all; Mr. McBeath is paying his own expenses—railroad fare, taxi charges, hotel bills and so forth—from his home in Pittsburgh.

"THE SEA GULL" TO CLOSE THE BANDBOX

Washington Square Players' Longest Piece to Run Until June 1.

THE COMEDY OPENS JUNE 5

The Washington Square Players presented a translation of Anton Tchekhov's three act play "The Sea Gull" at the Bandbox Theatre last evening. This is the last production which the Players are offering at this theatre and it was one of their most presentations. Heretofore they have confined themselves almost entirely to the presentation of several one act plays in an evening, so "The Sea Gull" was the first long piece attempted.

The same spirit of sincerity which has permeated their earlier efforts characterized the performance of the Russian play. The work used was a translation by Marjorie Felt. The protagonists of the little drama of Russian life were familiar as having appeared in other plays presented by the Players. The principal roles were taken by Mary Morris, Helen Westley, Roland Young, Frank Conroy, Ralph Roeder and Florence Bryant.

The fact that the Rev. Mr. Ackley had said his wife became known when he met her in 1907, was a surprise to his attorney, John B. Coleman, applied to Justice Giechert to confirm the report of Mr. Ingraham recommending a decree for the clergyman. While the testimony in the case was not disclosed, it is known that Ralph P. Buell appeared as counsel for Mrs. Ackley and cross-examined the witnesses against her, but did not summon witnesses in her behalf.

Lincoln will sail with his old friend Chief Inspector Alfred Ward of Scotland Yard, who arrived yesterday on the Cameron. Inspector Ward made one trip here last October, but Lincoln fought extradition on the ground that the British Government wanted to get him over there to try for the British as a spy, and Inspector Ward had to go back again.

This time, however, nothing will prevent his setting the prisoner Lincoln through his attorney, Addison S. Pratt, applied to the United States Supreme Court on a writ of habeas corpus, but on the first hearing the highest court ordered his extradition. He is charged with forging the name of a former employer in London to checks amounting to $2,000.
