SLADE REBUKED AT RAE TANZER TRIAL

Accuses Government Prosecutor of Falsehood, but Apologizes Later.

OSBORNE ON THE STAND WILL TREAT ALL ALIKE

Benjamin Slade, attorney for Rae Tanzer, on trial for perjury, accused William Rand, Jr., special government prosecutor, of uttering "a deliberate and unqualified falsehood" at the morning session of the trial yesterday. Mr. Rand had said that Mr. Slade was not reading the record accurately.

The court room was filled with excitement right away. Judge Wolvorton got to his feet and counsel gathered in a little knot. James W. Osborne, who was in the witness chair, became with involuntary control of the disturbance. Juror No. 2, Abram H. Tompkins of Linden street, Yonkers, finally clarified matters by suggesting that the stenographer read over what Mr. Slade had read from the transcript of the hearing before Commissioner Houghton in March, 1915. The stenographer's notes showed that Mr. Slade had omitted the word "one" in reference to some letters from Rae Tanzer to Oliver Osborne. Judge Wolvorton rebuked Mr. Slade, who apologized to Mr. Rand.

Rae Tanzer went for a while into the proprietor of a hotel in Plainfield, N. J., where she says she met with Oliver Osborne, testified to the facts of their stay.

Mr. Osborne said that, unlike Oliver Osborne, he never wore diamonds or carried a cane, and that he smoked only cigarettes. He said he had not taken a drink since December 12, 1915.

"You swore off because you used to be so drunk that you couldn't do your work, didn't you?" cried Slade.

"Never was drunk in my life," Mr. Osborne retorted. "And I'm not going to answer by any more of those insulting questions."

"If you were the Oliver Osborne that took and ruined this poor girl would you admit it?" he shouted Mr. Slade.

Mr. Osborne refused to answer, saying he couldn't assume to be someone else. "You may slide the other way," he said, "but you don't own the court room."

Slade moved again for a mistrial when Mr. Rand tried to introduce letters from Oliver Osborne to Rae Tanzer. These letters were in the hands of the defense. Mr. Slade wanted things held up until the point could be decided by appeal to the higher courts, but Judge Wolvorton directed that the letters be lodged with the clerk of the court. Mr. Rand then read them to the jury. They had previously been read at the preliminary trial of a second offender was fined $50. The court will not be in session on Saturdays and Sundays.

The trial continues this morning.

NEW TRAFFIC COURT TAKES IN $578 FINES

Total of 48 Cases Handled by Magistrate House on the First Day.

WILL TREAT ALL ALIKE

New York now has a traffic court. It opened yesterday at 200 Mulberry street, a building used for more than half a century as Police Headquarters until a new structure was put up at 240 Centre street. Magistrate Frederick B. House, who is greatly interested in the vehicular traffic situation in the city, was assigned to the court by Chief Magistrate McAdoo, who opened the new court with a speech in which he outlined the reforms the court hopes to achieve.

"We hope to establish," said Mr. McAdoo, "a consistent treatment of those violating traffic ordinances, so they will know exactly what to expect and accordingly be deterred from violating the regulations."

All cases in Manhattan coming here will permit of analysis and careful study of the causes of accidents in our streets. We hope to extend the activities of the court to Brooklyn and The Bronx in due time."

Other speakers were Otto T. Bonnard, A. A. Anderson, chairman of the Mayor's advisory traffic committee; Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the Safety First Society; Borough President Marks, Lawrence Veller, housing expert of the Cherry Hill Association, and Deputy Police Commissioner Godley. Neither Mayor Mitchell nor Police Commissioner Woods was able to attend. Chief Justice Isaac Russell and Chief Clerk Frank Smith of the Court of Special Sessions were present, as well as Mrs. McAdoo and her daughter, Miss Eva McAdoo.

At the close of the first day $578 had been taken in in fines in the new court. Four persons went to jail in lieu of fines amounting to $54. Forty-eight cases were tried.

"The day was very trying, but I am satisfied we are proceeding in the right direction," Magistrate House said, on leaving the bench. "The streets of the city are dangerous at the present time. I believe that is a pretty generally admitted fact. The purpose of this court is to make them safe, or at least more safe."

It may as well be made clear now that all offenders will look alike to me. I think I was very considerate today. The fines are a guide and jail sentences will be imposed with them."

Speeders came in for the heaviest punishment yesterday. There were 200 offenders and 111 were fined more than $100. Most of them had to pay $25. A few hundred men were fined $50. The court will not be in session on Saturdays and Sundays.

OPERA CONDUCTOR IN MARITAL DISCORD

Rosina Van Dyck, Soprano, Asks Alimony From Hageman of Metropolitan.

SHE NAMES TWO WOMEN

Richard Hageman, assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, is accused in affidavits filed in the Supreme Court by his wife, who is a soprano in the Metropolitan under the name of Rosina Van Dyck, of devoting his attentions to other women in the past year and refusing to support her according to his means. Mrs. Hageman asks $200 a month alimony pending a will be heard to-day.

In connection with the suit it was learned yesterday that Rena Thornton, one of two women named by Mrs. Hageman, has been served with a summons in an attention suit. The papers were served on Miss Thornton at New York Hospital, where she had been ill until a day or so ago when she was able to return to her apartment at 131 Riverside Drive.

Through her attorney, Millard H. Ellison, Mrs. Hageman alleges that her husband has been with the Metropolitan in the past year and that his salary there, with the income he receives from coaching singers, brings in more than $7,000 a year. The couple were married in Amsterdam, Holland, in 1903 and came here in 1905.

Mrs. Hageman says they lived happily until March, 1915, when her husband began attending dances, going to concerts and other public affairs with one Grace Valentine. The plaintiff was then living with him and urged him to remain away from this woman and continue to live with me as a decent and respectable husband."

The plaintiff, who lived with her husband at 481 Central Park West, stated that in June, 1915, her husband went to San Francisco and remained until September, during which time he wrote to her but once. She went to Lako George and he joined her there in the autumn, but didn't pay her board bill. When they came back to New York he went to a bachelor hotel and she went to her brother's home at 2104 Vesey avenue, The Bronx, where she is now living.

Mrs. Hageman said she learned last November that her husband had been seen frequently in public with Rena Thornton and that when she asked him to desert he said: "She is a decent woman and is married to a man of the name of Simpson." The plaintiff said that Mr. Hageman, when her husband began living at 10 West Sixty-first street she told him: "I know that you are living with Rena Thornton. I am ashamed that my name is Hageman." She said her husband replied: "No one knows I am living with her, except you and a few mutual friends."

Mrs. Hageman says her husband paid her $50 a week last winter and then cut the amount to $40, and finally to $25. At Miss Thornton's apartment a man who said he was her brother said she was ill and could not be seen. He said Hageman is a friend of hers, but asserted he does not live there. He asserted that he was Hageman.

CHARGE PICKETS ARE "STRONG ARM MEN"

Cloak Manufacturers May Go Over Mayor's Head in Asking More Police.

Belief that members of the cloak-makers' union are using "strong arm men" in their picketing was expressed by garment manufacturers yesterday.

A report was also current that the manufacturers are dissatisfied with the amount of money the police are expending in controlling the strikers' activities and that there was a movement on foot among them to request Gov. Whitman to have the force on strike duty increased.

Statements to this effect were made in connection with the arraignment in Jefferson Market court of David Gins, connected with the firm of Gins Bros., skirt makers at 100 West Street, who were arrested as he was entering this building, charged with violating the Sullivan law by carrying a blackjack.

At the time, it was said, he was surrounded by union men of husky build and one of these informed a policeman that Gins was carrying a dangerous weapon. The police officer, who had never carried a blackjack and that one of the men near him dropped a heavy stick into his pocket. Murray Simon, daughter of the late Henry C. Simon, Manufacturers Protective Association, obtained an adjournment of the case until 2 o'clock this afternoon. Gins was released in $1,000 bail.

It was said the manufacturers felt they were compelled to go over the Mayor's head in asking the Governor for police protection in connection with the strike, because the present force of patrolmen had not been vigorous enough in dealing with the strikers since the manufacturers refused to accept the Mayor's offer of arbitration.

A meeting of the United Cloak and Suit Designers Association at the Grand Opera House, Eighth avenue and Twenty-third street, was addressed by Jacob Mannheim, counsel to the association, who, it is asserted, have been threatened with injury by strike pickets.

April moved to 121 Riverside Drive, where Miss Thornton had an apartment. She called him there on the telephone, and when Miss Thornton answered the telephone Mrs. Hageman asked for her husband. When she got him she said the following conversation ensued: "Why don't you send me some money?"

"I haven't any."

"You made $700 in the past two weeks. You certainly ought to have some left."

"I often have large sums, but I spend it."

"Well, I have to have some money." "Get it somewhere else."

"If you don't support me I am going to sue you and the woman."

"Why don't you get any more money?"

Mrs. Hageman says her husband paid her $50 a week last winter and then cut the amount to $40, and finally to $25. At Miss Thornton's apartment a man who said he was her brother said she was ill and could not be seen. He said Hageman is a friend of hers, but asserted he does not live there.
