Miss Novae Plays With the New Symphony

Brazilian Pianist Gives an Enjoyable Performance With the Orchestra.

The programme of the eighth afternoon concert of the New Symphony Society at Carnegie Hall yesterday was one of comforting compactness. The prelude to "The Masteringers," Mozart's D minor piano concerto and Sir Edward Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme" formed a trio of well-contrasted attractions. The prelude, its performance was such that the hearer felt reasonably certain that there had been at least one rehearsal.

Miss Guilmar Novae, formerly of Brazil, was the pianist. This singular young person has excited curiosity and warm admiration, the former by reason of the uncertainties and even whimsicalities of her art and the latter by the extraordinary beautiful performance of which she sometimes gives. She certainly brought happiness to her auditors yesterday as well as the lovers of Mozart.

As she is of prodigious technical display and of evoking from the piano thunders of mellow tone, she played the Mozart music with ravishing simplicity of style and an exquisite beauty of phrasing. The delicate outlines of the composer's melodies and his incomparable balance of phrases. Continence and respect were evidenced in every movement of the young woman's playing. Her playing was so good that she has made a deeper impression if it had been accompanied in a manner more suited to the music.

But even under repression a body of strings, under by eighteen first violin and resting on a foundation of nine double basses, is prone to make a Mozart concerto sound a little ossified. The conductor, however, was so judiciously shrewd that he kept the orchestra from falling into the trap of monotony. The music had its interest. Probably it would please people more if it were played by a more brilliant orchestra. The variations did not excite the audience, though the music had its interest. Probably it would please people more if it were played by a more brilliant orchestra.

Sir Edward Elgar has benefited by the recital. Since his conductor was naturally shy at Joseph Holbrook and Cyril Scott and do not wish incessantly to present the highly explosive composition of Percy Grainger, they have taken Sir Edward Elgar's music as a model. The variations did not excite the audience, though the music had its interest. Probably it would please people more if it were played by a more brilliant orchestra.

FRANKLIN MURPHY DIES IN FLORIDA

Was Formerly Governor of New Jersey and Veteran of Civil War.

PALM BEACH, Fla., Feb. 24.—Franklin Murphy, former Governor of New Jersey, died at the Royal Poinciana Hotel here today, following an operation for abdominal trouble last Thursday. Toxic poisoning set in and his condition had become serious for several days. He came here February 8 with Charles F. Brooker of Ansonia, Conn., an old friend.

Franklin Murphy was one of the last of the living civil war veterans who gained prominence in the councils of the Republican party. He was born in Jersey City January 3, 1846, the son of William H. and Abby Elizabeth Hagar Murphy. The family moved to Newark, N. J., when he was a boy. He received an academic education at Newark, but, like many of the youths of his generation, he left school to enter the Union army. At the age of 18 he enlisted as a private in the 69th New York Infantry, New Jersey Volunteers. He made an enviable record in the service, winning a first lieutenant's commission before he was mustered out at the close of the war in 1865.

He at once returned to Newark and established the Murphy Varnish Company, of which he was chairman of the board of directors at the time of his death. His business was successful from the start. In 1868 he married Miss Janet Colwell in Newark. She died in 1904. They had two children, Franklin Murphy, Jr., and Mrs. Helen M. Kinney, who is living.

From 1883 to 1886 Mr. Murphy was a member of the Newark Board of Aldermen, becoming its president during the latter part of his service. He was elected to the State Assembly in 1885. He became chairman of the Republican State Committee in 1892, serving in that capacity for twenty years. From 1886 to 1890 he was a member of the State Board of Education for Boys at Jamesburg, N. J. He was a member of the Republican National Executive Committee from 1900 to 1908, and at the Republican National Convention at Chicago the latter year he received seventy-seven votes for the Vice-Presidential nomination.

The New Jersey Republican convention unanimously nominated him for Governor in 1906. He was elected to that office and served from 1907 to 1909. He was Governor when New Jersey enacted her first primary law, her first labor legislation and the first law regulating the tenement houses. He also passed the tenement house commission act, the bill to establish the tuberculosis sanitarium at Glen Gardner and acts to abolish the fee system in State and county offices. Many political honors came to Gov. Murphy during his public career. President McKinley offered him the post of Ambassador to Russia, but he declined it. He was appointed United States Commissioner of the Paris Exposition in 1900, and from 1905 to 1912 he was a member of the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. He served as delegate to five Republican national conventions.

Coming of colonial stock, he was elected president-general of the Sons of the American Revolution in 1898, holding the office until 1906. He also was a member of the Society of Colonial Wars in 1900, and from 1905 to 1912 he was a member of the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. He served as delegate to five Republican national conventions.
