GENERAL GORGAS DIES IN LONDON

Former Surgeon General Passes Away at an Early Hour This Morning.

LONDON, July 4 (Sunday).—Major-General of the United States Army, died here early to-day.

Gen. Gorgas had been in a critical condition for the last three weeks, although at intervals he showed improvement and quite recently it was announced that he might be able to return home. He went to London preparatory to a mission to West Africa in behalf of the British Government to investigate sanitary conditions, but suffered a stroke of apoplexy and was sent to a hospital for several months.

Several American officers have been with Gen. Gorgas during his illness, including Brig.-Gen. Robert E. Noble, Assistant Surgeon General of the United States Army, who is now head of the mission.

William Crawford Gorgas, fighter of tropical diseases and sanitation expert, gained international fame by driving yellow fever from Havana after the American War and later clearing up the Panama Canal zone. The monumental work could be constructed with the maximum health of the tollers.

During the world war he accomplished much in the expansion of the American Army, and he was promoted to the rank of major general in October, 1918. He was at once recalled for active duty. He was credited with making the American Army the healthiest of any of the world's fighting forces. One of his first acts in the medical corps was that the relatively low rank of colonel was the limit which a medical officer could ordinarily reach, and he caused a turmoil in military circles by demanding for seventy positions of general rank. He was promoted to major general in 1919, when his health failed and forced him to discontinue his work. He was one of the holders of the Distinguished Service Cross of the Club of America to those accomplishing most for birds.

Mr. Dutcher was born in this city 20 years ago and for many years was general agent for the Prudential Life Insurance Company. Later he went to Plainfield, and was instrumental in bringing about the establishment of Bonnie Burn Sanatorium for tuberculous patients. Plainfield's open air school was named after him in 1910 and son, Col. Dutcher, survives him.

MRS. HANNAH W. CROMWELL. Mrs. Hannah W. Cromwell, widow of John Cromwell, died yesterday in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Benjamin G. Glover, at 270 Weymann avenue, New Rochelle. She was a descendant of an old Quaker family.

MRS. L. B. VAN RENSSLAER. Mrs. Louisa Baynwell Van Rensselaer, widow of Alexander Van Rensselaer, died yesterday in her country home in Woodmere, L. I.

For fifty years Mrs. Van Rensselaer was a member of the New York Yacht Club. Her country home was at 12 East Thirty-seventh street. As Miss Louisa Baynwell, a member of an old and influential New York family, she was born in 1844 and died in 1918 and who represented the seventh generation of her family in New York in 1918.

Several months were consumed in an inspection of the epidemic. His recommendations, afterward carried out, practically wiped out the frequent epidemics of the dreaded "lung disease" which used to decimate the native workmen in New York. The epidemic of pneumonia, he found, was the aftermath of influenza, and he demonstrated that medical science continues its progress and the application of what it has learned, cases of typhoid, yellow fever, cholera, bacillary plague and the like would be so rare that medical science would be able to hunt for one in a far-off, semi-barbaric places. His own labors bore out this belief to a great extent, as manifested in his conquest of the plague of the Orient, his fight with typhoid, and his work in the Rockefeller Foundation for Medical Research early recognized the great worth of Gen. Gorgas and retained him as a permanent member of its international health board, with the principal duty of hunting for and eradicating diseases from the world. He first became associated with the board in 1915, when he resigned his army position to take charge of the organization and conduct of a medical relief expedition to Serbia, which at the time was being ravaged by a typhoid epidemic. In the two years that followed he was busy surveying various pest fields where the Rockefeller Foundation was engaged in its work of eradicating the disease. This was America's participation in the war and he returned to his old post as Surgeon-General of the United States Army. Under him there was developed an efficient medical corps, and he had undertaken the war and upon his shoulders was the responsibility for the health of approximately 4,000,000 men.

Defeats Yellow Fever in Ecuador. When the war ended he went once more to the inactive list of the army and took up the programme of the International Health Board in Central and South American countries, which had been interrupted by the war. He was especially known in the autumn of 1919, when it was announced that he had successfully wiped out yellow fever from the port of Guayaquil, which had long been a pestiferous center for scores of years. From there he went to Peru and made an extensive investigation. His findings were conveyed to the Peruvian Government, which at once sent him to Lima in April, 1920, made a contract with him whereby he was to carry out a five-year sanitation programme, beginning operations in January, 1921.
