

Accorded to the report published to it, it appears that the agricultural products of these States in 1844, were valued at $190,648 less than those of 1843.

The great falling off has been in the products of Illinois, which is more than ten millions of dollars. This was caused by the tremendous floods and freshets which covered a very large extent of land bordering on the Mississippi and other rivers of that State, and which destroyed an immense quantity of grain just ready for harvest, and reduced the agricultural productions of the State very much.

There has been an increase in the value of the productions of only three States in the list, and this increase only amounts to $7,182,409, while the decrease in the value of the agricultural products of the other States amounts to $24,183,077. A very large part of this decrease has been caused by a great reduction in the prices of the most important staples. The average price of cotton in 1844 was from 11 to 12 cents per pound less than in 1843, and in other staples there has also been a very great decline in price.

The aggregate value of the agricultural products of 1844, was $13,739,320 more than the value of the agricultural products of 1843—of this nearly six millions was on the sugar crop alone.

Notwithstanding the decrease in the value of the products of the soil of these delinquent States, the inhabitants of each are annually increasing in wealth, as they have other resources, equally productive as agriculture. We annex a table made from the census returns of 1840 showing the other principal resources of these States.

Table with 3 columns: State, Minerals, Manufactures, and Total. Rows include Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia.

Allowing for no increase in the value of manufactures and mining of these States from 1840 to 1844, we find that the value of the three principal resources of these States, was in 1844, $264,871,897, but as the products of the miners and the operations of the manufacturers increase more rapidly than the products of the soil, as they are not so sensibly affected by the seasons—we can safely estimate an increase of twenty-five per cent in these resources, which would swell the value of the products of these States from these three sources to $331,069,648.

The products of the forest are not included in this state, and the value of the mineral and the agricultural products of the nine delinquent States, and the annual products of the soil, at about three hundred millions of dollars. The States have an aggregate debt of $110,000,000, the annual interest on which amounts to about six and a half millions of dollars, to pay which would only require an average tax of about two cents on every dollar of the annual product of the States.

The payment of this tax would be more severely felt now than at any other time, as the value of the products is increasing from year to year so rapidly that a corresponding reduction in the rate of taxation would take place, until the resources of each State would become so great, that a gradual reduction of the debt would be a very easy thing.
