

INTELLIGENCE BY THE MAIL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30, 1848.

We are all in confusion, and in confusion daily becoming more confounded. In a complex, intricate and inextricable confusion, Democrats and Whigs, we are all perplexed, and stand utterly at a loss which way to move.

The ruling powers here, at present, are distributed as follows—Col. W. Davenport, Governor, and by rank second in command on this line, since the departure of General Taylor, and considering his many and arduous duties, gives general satisfaction. Capt. Chapman is Quartermaster; and collector of internal revenues—and, from his well-known business qualities, gives universal satisfaction. Mr. Wm. Colehour is in charge of the Commissary Department, and Collector of Customs, and it is saying but little to declare, that in this light, he is well placed in better hands. This city is garrisoned by Col. Temple's command of five companies of the tenth regiment, with Capt. Gee and Dunlap's companies of cavalry.

General Taylor is recovering from a severe illness, which at one time gave but little hope of his surviving. This has been a very sickly season here, and great numbers have found their last earthly resting place.

A new order of things commenced on the first instant. From that day ceases the power of the Mexicans over the revenues of the city, all being received and disbursed by Capt. Chapman, whose first move was to organize an American police, and to have the schools, and to encourage public schools, wherein both the English and Spanish will be taught. It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

Affairs on the Rio Grande—Interesting Intelligence.

MATAMORAS, Jan. 6, 1848.

The ruling powers here, at present, are distributed as follows—Col. W. Davenport, Governor, and by rank second in command on this line, since the departure of General Taylor, and considering his many and arduous duties, gives general satisfaction.

Capt. Chapman is Quartermaster; and collector of internal revenues—and, from his well-known business qualities, gives universal satisfaction. Mr. Wm. Colehour is in charge of the Commissary Department, and Collector of Customs, and it is saying but little to declare, that in this light, he is well placed in better hands.

This city is garrisoned by Col. Temple's command of five companies of the tenth regiment, with Capt. Gee and Dunlap's companies of cavalry.

General Taylor is recovering from a severe illness, which at one time gave but little hope of his surviving. This has been a very sickly season here, and great numbers have found their last earthly resting place.

A new order of things commenced on the first instant. From that day ceases the power of the Mexicans over the revenues of the city, all being received and disbursed by Capt. Chapman, whose first move was to organize an American police, and to have the schools, and to encourage public schools, wherein both the English and Spanish will be taught.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It must have been of large size. It frightened the earliest seers.

It was seen by an individual, calling himself Bennett, visited this city as a Baptist preacher. He was received and taken in by the brethren, and spent some two months here, enjoying the hospitality of the members of the church. He declared, that he had been proposed for the hand of one of our most accomplished young ladies. He was thought by some to be one of the most talented, eloquent, pious and devoted of divines, and was accordingly received into the church. Having taken in some of the worthy brethren to the tune of $150 or $200 in the shape of loans, presents, &c. he left them—and after he was gone, a report reached here, that he was an impostor, and that he had been convicted of robbing, as those who cherished him when here know now that he is in a fair way to visit the penitentiary of the State of Louisiana, as a representative of the State of New York, he had been concerned in a robbery, and been arrested, with a portion of the stolen property in his possession. I trust that this will be a warning to our citizens, and will teach them in future to be wary of those who fondle strangers. It would have been better if the same hospitalities had been extended to some of the many worthy young men in our city, who have never even been introduced to the members of the church, who were lavishing their attentions on an impostor.

The democratic convention of our sister State, Mississippi, refused to nominate George M. Dallas for President, and Gen. Quitman for Vice President. It is thought that Walker's stock was below par at home.

As much as has been said of South Carolina and her politicians, it must be admitted, that whenever that gallant State does anything, she does it well. A sum of $50,000 was deposited in New Orleans, for the purpose of aiding the sick and disabled soldiers of the Palmetto regiment to reach their homes. All that the general government does to aid the soldiers, is to be commended, and from there they must work their way home, as best they can. Frequently they reach there shockingly mutilated, without a dollar in their pockets, and without the first friend to assist them. It is to be hoped, that the Legislatures of the different States see the helpless condition of too many of our gallant soldiers, just returned from the fields of their fame, as we in this regard thoroughly see them, and will do all in our power to make a similar humane provision.

John Rogers, Esq. of Tuscaloosa, has been elected Comptroller, and William Graham, Esq. of Tuscaloosa, has been elected Auditor of the State of Alabama.

Gov. Chapman, yesterday returned from chartering the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, with a veto. This is the more to be regretted, as we have just learned from Nashville, that the Legislature of that State, towards the construction of that portion of the road, which would be within that State. An attempt will be made to pass the bill in defiance of the veto, or if that cannot be done, to amend the bill, so as to pass it without the veto. There is to be another Taylor meeting in this city to-night. The Taylor ball is rolling over Alabama with the force of a tornado, prostrating everything before it.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 25, 1848.

The Constitution of Kentucky—Movement in Politics—Trouble Ahead.

This being peculiarly a "progressive" age in all things, and particularly in State governments, Kentucky, ever on the alert, is about to revise her constitution. The people have once voted in favor of calling a convention, and a bill has passed the Legislature now in session, again submitting the question for their final determination. At first, the opposition was strong; but the vote already taken has put a quietus to the opposition, and the convention is now loudly telling their reasons for being in favor of a convention. A few of the leading conventionists are determined that the new constitution shall contain a provision for the abolition of slavery, and they have already declared that so long as there is a black skin in Kentucky, it should be held in bondage. But that a majority are opposed to slavery, or, at least, to the increase of slaves, is clearly shown by the vote already taken, and by the fact that the prohibition of the importation of slaves, which was just taken in the Senate; the vote stood 19 to 17 against the third reading. The House stands in a short time proportion.

The democratic informal meeting here, a short time since; by a portion of the party it was called a gubernatorial nominating convention; but a majority were opposed to making a party of it, and the meeting was called a "meeting of the friends of the Union," and the meeting appeared accordingly, to meet again the 15th of March. The whig convention is to be held in this place on the 22d of February; and among the many opponents for nomination, the names of the present Lieutenant Governor, and William J. Graves, are most prominent. Dixon is opposed by the conventionists, who assert that he is an anti-convention man, and insist that his nomination would be a disgrace to the whig party, and that he is supported by the Letcher faction of the whig party, together with that portion of the whig party, who are opposed to the whig party.

General Taylor is recovering from a severe illness, which at one time gave but little hope of his surviving. This has been a very sickly season here, and great numbers have found their last earthly resting place.

A new order of things commenced on the first instant. From that day ceases the power of the Mexicans over the revenues of the city, all being received and disbursed by Capt. Chapman, whose first move was to organize an American police, and to have the schools, and to encourage public schools, wherein both the English and Spanish will be taught.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

It is not known what revenue may be derived from the city, but it is presumed that it will cover the ordinary expenses, and leave a surplus, to improve the streets and public buildings.

The Mexicans appear to rejoice that the Alcaides have ceased to have power—it being merely a nominal one, and that the revenues, the revenue, they have even managed to enrich themselves. This, however, is nothing strange, and is not to be wondered at, in view of the Mexican character, from the President down to the most subordinate official.

Port of New York, February 1, 1848.

Ship—Monterey, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Ship—Windsor, (packet) Lower, Liverpool, C. H. Nelson, Master; with passengers, 40; cargo, 1000 tons. Arrived at New York, Jan. 28, 1848.

Professor Nichol's Lectures of Friday Jan. 1st.

Professor Nichol's Lectures of Friday Jan. 1st. The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.

The lecturer, Mr. Nichol, has read an interesting paper on the subject of the mechanical philosophy, and has explained the various phenomena of nature, and has shown that they are all governed by the same laws, and that they are all the result of the same cause.