

EFFECTS OF THE LATE GALE.

One Hundred Buildings Unroofed.

OTHERS BLOWN DOWN.

LIVES LOST AND PERSONS INJURED.

DAMAGE TO SHIPPING AND CANAL BOATS.

From the Albany Journal, March 13.

The severity of the gale can be seen on the pier, where it had full swing. Five buildings were unroofed, but no person was injured. The roof of Smith, Patton & Co.'s factory was blown off, and the building was blown down.

The roof of St. Paul's church, corner of State and Third streets, was blown off, and the building was blown down.

On the wharves opposite many piles of lumber were blown down, and some of it into the river.

One of the houses of Mrs. James, on the corner of State and Third streets, was blown down, and the building was blown down.

The roof of the wooden house of Edward S. Fuller, No. 119 Second street, is crushed in.

The roof of a dwelling and store near said bridge is also off.

Nash's mill house on the Basin, below the depot, is blown down.

The roof of the Pottery, South Troy, is off.

A man named James Hughes, in the employ of Mr. Herick, heavy keeper, while standing in Ferry street, was blown down, and the building was blown down.

There are other reports of persons killed or injured, but as we are unable to trace them we presume they are unroofed.

The Gale at Boston.

From the Albany Journal, March 13.

After a few days of remarkably fine weather, clouds spread over the heavens last evening, and a soaking rain followed.

The wind subsequently changed to the north-west, and the rain continued to fall.

The wind blew with the force of a hurricane, and it was probably the heaviest gale from that quarter we have recorded in our history.

The mercury indicated 32.5—thermometer 24.

It blows very heavy in the bay, and but few mariners are reported to be at sea.

George's Island this forenoon, but as she showed no signals her name could not be ascertained.

The vessel was reported to be bark, with a pilot, and a signal of distress flying.

The vessel proceeded to her assistance.

We learn that a three-story frame building, sixty by forty feet, was blown down in Ash street, corner of Messrs. Leland & Co., for a boot and shoe manufacturing establishment, was completely prostrated by the wind.

There are not less than fifty buildings in this city unroofed.

The roof of the Second District School house, in State street, was blown off, and Mr. Marble, the teacher, was badly injured, and his face severely cut under the eye.

The roof of John Archer's stable was carried off, and the building was blown down.

A portion of the tin on the roof of Van Penthusen's manufactory, on the corner of State and Third streets, was blown down.

About noon a portion of the north wall of the extensive brewery of John Taylor, adjoining the South Ferry landing and facing the river, was blown down, doing considerable damage.

The small Gothic frame building on the sidewalk in Bethlehem, just below the south bounds of the city, known as "Grosbeck's Church," was entirely demolished.

The roof on the extensive furnace of Shier, Packard & Co., on Grand street, was raised some six inches from the ground, and was blowing like a wave of the sea when we left.

The main roof of the steam rolling mill of Messrs. E. Corning & Co., on the corner of State and Third streets, was blown down.

The roof of the building on the corner of State and Third streets, was blown down.

A portion of the roof of the Orphan Asylum, in the extreme west end of the city, together with the balcony and a portion of the roof, was blown down.

A portion of the roof of John G. White's extensive mill house, on Hudson street, was carried away.

A portion of the front wall of John Evers' brick building, on the corner of State and Third streets, was blown down.

A two-story brick dwelling in Second street, was partially destroyed. The roof was blown off, and the walls were blown down.

A portion of the roof of the district schoolhouse on Arbor Hill was carried away, and nearly all the tin cornice.

At the time of writing, (2 o'clock), the wind was blowing from the north-west, and was blowing from the north-west, with an occasional blast that made the stately buildings on the hill tremble to their foundations.

The gale set in about 12 o'clock last night, and continued to blow from the north-west, and was blowing from the north-west, when it reached its height.

At 1 o'clock this afternoon, the greater portion of the work of the gale was over.

It is impossible to approximate with any degree of correctness to the amount of damage done by the gale. It is large, but falls much less than those who are able to bear the brunt of the storm.

Most property scattered throughout the city, not a human being has been injured.

The Gale at Troy.

From the Troy Times, March 13.

Another such tremendous blow as that of today the Albany city has never known.

The roof of the building on the corner of State and Third streets, was blown down.
