All Hallow Even.

This evening many of our country people—English, Irish and Scotch—will celebrate the time honored festival known as All Hallow Even, or Not Cost Nigh, it always has been observed on the evening preceding the 1st of November, which is All Saints' Day.

The observance of this season is curious, and has existed since the days of the Crusades. It is a time when the living and the dead are supposed to be in communication.

In all nations the approach of winter is hailed with appropriate festivities, it being regarded as the season of indoor enjoyment, and the cultivation of kindlier feelings in social life; thus the holidays—the time for gifts to friends and relatives—always thrives during the first months of winter, and have their appropriate expression among the people of every clime.

Among the most usual observances of Hallow Even is the burning of nuts by the young people. The damsel will place three nuts upon the fire, giving each of them the name of one of her admirers. If the nuts crack or jump the lover is proved unworthy, but if it burns brightly he will prove a kindly man. If the nuts do not crack or jump together they will be married.

The following, from an old poem, tells the story very nicely—

These glowing nuts are emblems true Of what in human life we view. The nut which cracked first from its shell, Is the first of our passions to reveal; Or from each other wildly start, And with a noise forever part.

But not the nut, which burns in peace, With mutual fondness, while they burn, Will to each other kindly turn, And as the vital sparks decay, Together gently sink away.

Another custom is to place apples in a pail of water, and whoever can catch them in their teeth they are entitled to the apple. Of course the face and head of the apple stealer go under water. Still another custom is to catch the elusive apple with a bound, and with its taper it flew whirling round.

Young ladies and gentlemen who would be further posted upon the love divinations of this celebration had better peruse Burns' poem of "Hallow Even," and make a note of it.

A GREAT SUCCESS.—The ever-loving Ravens accomplish this evening the 26th night of their present engagement at Niblo's Garden. The new pantomime, "Blanche," will be played this evening for the twentieth time. It is in the height of its popularity.

THE THEATRE.—The attractions offered at the different places of amusement to-night are of such a varied and pleasing character as to render detailed notices of each particular establishment altogether superfluous. On glancing at the directory, at the head of the editorial page, every taste will be suited at once.
