DEATH OF RICHARD COBDEN. Richard Cobden, M. P., the English Radical Reformer.

Our European advisers by the Germania inform us of the death of Richard Cobden, M. P., the great English champion of free trade, the ablest man in the ranks of the radical reformers of Great Britain, a sincere and honest democrat, and a firm friend of the people of the United States, their government and rights.

Richard Cobden was a self-made man. He was born at Milford, Wiltshire, England, in the year 1804. His father was a small farmer in that neighborhood; so that the early years of the legislator may be said to have been passed in a struggle with poverty; and there are few passages in biography more interesting than the account of his rise from the home of a Sussex yeoman, and to the position of a boy in a London warehouse, to a place in the British Senate, where he could command his audience and influence the destiny of nations.

Mr. Cobden died in Suffolk street, London, on Sunday, the 23d of April, in the sixty-first year of his age. He was in declining health for some years past, and he last appeared in Parliament, or at public meetings out side the house, were followed by such public prostration as to seriously impede the discharge of his public duties.

The immediate cause of his demise was a prolonged attack of chronic spasmodic asthma. Richard Cobden was a self-made man. He was born at Milford, Wiltshire, England, in the year 1804. Mr. Cobden, like all men of his stamp, pushed his way up by his own energy and industry. He was a manufacturer, and he was a statesman. He was a man of great energy and industry. He was a man of great energy and industry. He was a man of great energy and industry.

GRANT.

Organization of the Late Rebel Army of Northern Virginia. GENERAL R. E. LEE'S FAREWELL ORDER.

A VISIT TO THE ENEMY'S CAMP. Mr. L. A. Hendrick's Despatch. HEADQUARTERS, FIFTH ARMY CORPS, NEAR APPOMATTOX COURT HOUSE, APRIL 11, 1865.

The work of paroling General Lee's army commenced today. It proves to be a matter requiring more time than was generally supposed. About four thousand have been paroled to-day, belonging chiefly to the artillery, cavalry and scattering commands. It will probably take two more days to get through. General Sharpe is the paroling officer. His headquarters are at Glenn's Hotel, so called, for such it once was, and the old sign yet swings in the street in Appomattox Court House.

There is an air of business about the place, and with the paroling of the army the streets give the surroundings more the look of a town meeting or general election than one of the events of the war. What causes delay in completing the work is the necessity of making out duplicate papers.

First in giving their paroles were General Lee and a portion of his staff. That the people of the North may know the nature of the obligation entered into by General Lee, I send a copy of the parole, as follows, which I copied from the original.

THE FORM OF THE PAROLE. We, the undersigned, prisoners of war belonging to the Army of Northern Virginia, on the 9th day of April, 1865, surrendered to General R. E. Lee, commanding said army, and to Lieutenant General Grant, commanding the armies of the United States, and to the respective paroles of honor that we will not hereafter serve in the armies of the Confederate States, or in any military capacity whatsoever, until mutually approved by the respective authorities.

Mr. Charles H. Hannam's Despatch. HEADQUARTERS, SIXTH ARMY CORPS, NEAR RICE'S STATION, VA., APRIL 12, 1865. THE MARCH TO BURKEVILLE.

Mr. J. Walton Pritch's Despatch. HEADQUARTERS, NINTH CORPS, BURKEVILLE JUNCTION, APRIL 12, 1865. The army has begun its movement from the scene of the recent surrender of the enemy, and already the country contiguous to these headquarters is covered with the camps of the returning veterans.

Major General Meade and staff arrived here from Farmville about noon yesterday, and will probably sojourn in this vicinity for several days to come. Major General Sherman, with a small detachment of his cavalry, passed through here about ten o'clock yesterday morning, en route for Nottingham Court House, distant some nine miles in our rear, where it is reported that the outpost of the army will soon be made. As yet nothing has transpired to indicate what disposition is to be made of the army, though it is probable, now that General Meade has arrived, that something definite regarding future movements will be made speedily.
