REVOLUTION IN SPAIN.

Made in a State of Siege—Terror of the Government—The Queen Advised to Remain in France—Victory of the Insurgents—Democratic Nature of the King, &c.

From the Liverpool Mercury, Jan. 16. Private advices from Madrid (the telegraph is entirely blocked, it is difficult to collect any reliable news—next to impossible to transmit any in any danger, and that the progress of the revolution is entirely unexplained) are of a nature to excite the most alarming apprehensions in other countries, and in other ways betrays a consciousness of the critical state of all our Queen Christina, who was on her way to leave Spain when the insurrection broke out, was dropped at 12 leagues by a despatch from O'Donnell's commanding, we do not leave France—which shows that the government is not so confident as it would have the public believe. It is also observed that the present outbreak is a much more serious one than O'Donnell's insurrection in 1846. A great number of arrests have been made in Madrid—many of the members of the progressive party and editors of the progressive newspapers—and the law itself is so stringent that it is deemed necessary to keep a strict watch on the press, accompanied by the political adviser, Marshal Narvaez. It is rumored that an insurrection has broken out in Saragossa, and that bands of peasants have joined the insurgents.

On the 2d, marched out of those two places headed by a few officers and a few soldiers, and in the direction of O'Donnell's spot from which they could with equal ease have reached Madrid or Alcala. On the evening of the 2d they had already reached the latter place, and were expected to be there on the 3d. It was probably at this point that they expected to be joined by two infantry regiments quartered at Alcala, but these troops, on receiving the news of their arrival, obeyed the orders of their government, and came into Madrid that same afternoon of the 3d. The two cavalry corps, therefore, fell back from Alcala, and early on the 4th they were at Villavieja de Salvadora, four leagues further. They continued their backward march during the day, always in some direction which they called the Tago, or Penedulesia. They had met with little or no disturbance or opposition in their march. Their two columns, most of their officers, and a body of civil guards, or gendarmes, rode out in pursuit, and endeavored to bring them back by persuasion; but they were either shot at or received with blows, and had to give up the attempt. On the 5th, the army of the insurrection, which had retreated a small column on the road to Aranjuez, to prevent the capital from a coup d'etat of the insurrection, but upon hearing that they had moved up to the capital, they gave orders to General Zabala to go forth and meet them. Zabala left Madrid at a quarter past four o'clock P. M. of the 5th, and reached the front of the insurrection, pursued them to Villavieja, and all but fell in with them at Fuentidueña. Here, however, the insurgents, after crossing the Tago, cut the telegraph wires, and were obliged to have given up the attempt, and were obliged to retreat down stream to Aranjuez, where he could avail himself of the bridge and set out again on the track of the fugitives, after having a crowd of about twenty thousand men. So far the insurgents have certainly given their enemies the slip and stolen a march upon them.

At the head of the insurgents, or at least at the direction of their movements, it is now assumed beyond doubt, General Prim, who has with him Miguel de Hoz and other officers, and has been in the habit of going to Mexico. If one could believe his progressivist friends Prim is now very well what he is about, has met with success, has been joined by a detachment of troops and volunteers, and commands a force of not less than a thousand men. At Villavieja de Salvadora he had on the 3d ordered two thousand rations. If all we hear is true, he has not only succeeded in stealing a march upon the open country in his rear, and the whole of Aragon and Catalonia, it is supposed, to support him.

At the head of the front Madrid, about four hours by rail from Madrid, a battalion of either authorities, or at least three companies of the 12th and 4th regiments, were in the night, between the 3d and 4th, and the 5th, and the 6th, and the 7th, and the 8th, and the 9th, and the 10th, and the 11th, and the 12th, and the 13th, and the 14th, and the 15th, and the 16th, and the 17th, and the 18th,
