OUR PARIS CORRESPONDENCE. Alarming Political Hopes—Napoleon's Peace Policy—Preparations for the Return of the French Troops from Mexico—The Iron-clad Squadron Which Goes to Look Out for Filibusters—The Suit Against American Missions—Change in the Legislation.

Paris, Jan. 16, 1867. All sorts of rumors of an exciting character have been in circulation during the past week, breaking in upon the festive and social character of the holiday season. The recent naval success in the Corca, the note presented by the Turkish Ambassador in the way of protest against the aid and encouragement given to the insurrection in Candia, the rumor that France was about to enter into a triple alliance with England, Austria, Italy and Turkey, in opposition to the projects attributed to Russia, embracing the removal from the Black Sea of the interdict placed upon it by the treaty of Paris of 1856, and the seizure of Constantinople, the fear that France is still intriguing to keep Maximilian in Mexico; all these have broken in very inopportunistly upon the festive season, and has a tendency to keep the political world in a state of anxiety and alarm.

At the head of this bulletin, of Sunday morning, the Moscow contains the following:—The maritime movements, rendered necessary in the different parts of France for the return of the expeditionary corps from Mexico, being now in part concluded, we are enabled to give a general list of the vessels which have already taken their departure for that destination—Cherbourg, Brest, L'Orient, Rochefort, and Toulon have furnished the following vessels of war and transports:—The Fontenay, the Boyard, the Ville de Lyon, the Ville de Bordeaux, the Boyard, the Massena, the Navarre, the Océanique, the Intrepid, the mission of the liner, the Azevon, the Nivern, the mission of the liner, the Cher, the Anbo, the Ebre, the Drome, the Yonne, the Seine, the Allier, the Cot-and the Pomme, the Grenade, the Oise, the Tarn, the Var, the Ardèche, the Seine, the Charante, and the Rhone, steam transports. Since the commencement of the present month (December) successive departures have taken place daily, and some vessels have already arrived at the mouth of the Gironde on the 15th of January.

The iron-clad division of the Contre Amiral Baron de la Roncière is nearly ready to leave for the Mediterranean. Admiral de la Roncière is at Toulon, where he was called without doubt to receive his final instructions.

The iron-clad division consists of the flagships Magenta, the frigate Flavière, which will start from Cherbourg, and the frigate Magenta, which will leave at the same time from Toulon and join the other ships at Madeira or Algiers. These vessels will visit the coast of the Mediterranean ports on their return from Mexico with the expeditionary corps, will clear the route in coming out of American waters and chase the filibusters, and the anarchists, who may present themselves in these waters sailing under foreign flags. We have every reason to believe that vessels of this description are arming and ready to go to sea.

The surveillance will be complete, for we are assured that the Admiral de la Roncière will visit the Bahama channel, Captain Clouet will visit the coast of Mexico, will assure the tranquillity of that coast, and Admiral Didot, sailing all the vessels of the division of the Atlantic will visit the coast of the States, entering the several ports, and placing himself in communication with our consuls, will call the attention of the consuls to the vigilance of our armaments which may be made in the waters of the Union.

These extraordinary precautions taken by the French Government are a safe return of the Mexican expeditionary corps, which is now in the hands of the Mexicans, and which has received some reliable information relative to a plan that had been formed to attack the coast of Mexico, and that they greatly fear that the Mexicans will not only be able to land, but also to disembark the troops at Vera Cruz.

At the end of the month of November all the main facts obtained by a visit to Bordeaux in the important case of the President of the United States against Messrs. Aron, the great industrialist, the banker, the speculator, the financier, and others, for the recovery of nearly three millions of francs, said by the Confederates agents to Messrs. Aron as part payment for vessels which were never delivered. The United States Government claims that, as the contract was not fulfilled, Messrs. Aron have no claim to the money, which of right, had they not been paid, would have been paid to the Government. The case came into court a few days since upon the application of the defendants that the plaintiffs should give the money to the Government, and the court gave its decision in favor of the Government.

Unless the matter is compromised, it will be brought on, I understand, in a few days to trial. Messrs. Aron have offered to pay 125,000 francs to settle the whole matter, but the Government has refused to accept it, and the case will be brought on in the name of the President of the United States, containing the suit, has not been able to see that this litigation will be a serious loss for the amount claimed, which is 2,800,000 francs.

Parties interested in the project of bringing the Seventh Regiment to France, have been very active in their efforts to accept their offer. The regulations are not so liberal as the regulations of the National Guard of Paris. It was decided that the regiment should be sent to France, and that the Government should be allowed to send the regiment to France, and that the Government should be allowed to send the regiment to France.

The tide since Tuesday has brought immense masses of heavy, solid ice down the North River into the bay and round into the East River, where, from the intensity of the cold, it is rapidly accumulating, giving the river the appearance of one large field of ice.
