

POLITICAL.

THE CAMPAIGN IN OHIO.

Speeches of Old Ben Wade and Senator Sherman.

Negro Suffrage and the National Bank System.

Old Ben Wade's Speech at Marietta, Ohio, on August 20.

THE SPEAKER'S TEXT.

I have an old text, my friends, which I have preserved from more than thirty years. I never have varied it, and I never expect to vary it. Exact and equal justice to all men, without reference to color, condition or race, is my political creed, and every step which I have taken, and every step which I expect to take, is in accordance with that creed.

THE SPEAKER'S TEXT.

There is a new element in our campaign now that causes those who opposed us to make more strenuous efforts for the occasion, but it is only the logical and legitimate consequence of all that we have done. It is the fact that we have secured the support of the colored people of Ohio, and that we have secured the support of the colored people of Ohio, and that we have secured the support of the colored people of Ohio.

THE SPEAKER'S TEXT.

One of the strongest arguments against giving the vote to the colored man is that he is ignorant, but there are some who would give him the vote on account of his ignorance, and yet that would be to give him the vote on account of his ignorance, and yet that would be to give him the vote on account of his ignorance.

THE SPEAKER'S TEXT.

It is not the right of government to give the vote to the colored man, but it is the right of government to give the vote to the colored man, and it is the right of government to give the vote to the colored man.

THE SPEAKER'S TEXT.

It was ordained to try men's souls. There was no middle course. As Douglas well said, every man was either a patriot or a rebel.
