rect that news telegrams for publication by news-transmission at a rate not exceeding fifty per cent on these rates. Another section provides that persons tampering with telegrams for the purpose of defaming their contents shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both, in the discretion of the court. The sum of $100 is appropriated to carry out the provisions of the act.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Accompanying this bill is an elaborate paper, in which it is said, although the world is indebted to the genius of a citizen of the United States for a practical development of the electric telegraph as a means of communication, and although the first line was planned in the United States, it was built with money furnished by Congress, the telegraph system has made less progress toward perfection and has been practically of less value to the masses of the people in our own country than in any civilized country on the globe.

In nearly every country in Europe the telegraph has become a speedy, certain and economical medium of communication, the inevitable benefits of which are extended to the inhabitants of the most remote and backward lands, as the great centres of trade in this country.

Telegraphic communication has always occupied a prominent position in the history of the telegraph as a medium of communication in times of emergency and as a catalyst of the necessary secrecy of public and private business.

Instead of an auxiliary to the postal system controlled by the State and conducted for the benefit of the people, it has become a system in the hands of rival companies, anxious only for extending their lines to prominent places where profits are to be secured in the most rapid and profitable manner.

The popular verdict of the people of this country, if it could be heard, would be that the telegraphic system in view of the competition of the rival companies it might become in this, is practically a failure.

The paper then proceeds to show what may be accomplished in this country by the use of a reliable, economical and at the same time profitable in the country, by referring to what is accomplished in other countries where the experiment has been made.

It is shown that in Belgium and Switzerland, where all but a comparatively few persons who are engaged in trade or who are authorized to employ telegraph lines, are required to pay for their use.
