The Commissioner of Internal Revenue received yesterday a number of gentlemen representing the commercial and shipping interests of New York and San Francisco, who called upon him for the purpose of protesting against the recent indiscriminate seizures of whiskey at San Francisco by the local internal revenue officers at that place.

WHAT WILL BE DONE WITH THE SOUTH.

There are Virginia, Mississippi and Texas to be disposed of. The popular verdict, it will be said, ought to be decisive in each of these States. Congress ought to be left to the people of each of those States, and let them decide whether democrats or republicans carry the day.

THE BOY-MOBY DUEL—Evasive Conduct of Colonel Boyd—Tact Letter from Moby.

The duel between Colonel Boyd and Colonel Moby has not yet taken place. A long and spicy correspondence has been in progress between the parties, but it appears to be rather evasive for the fray. The last letter from Moby is as follows:—

PROBABLE HIDEOUT IN BROOKLYN.

An intoxicated man shot by an officer while attempting to make his escape. Shortly before twelve o'clock on Saturday night, officer John Burke, of the Forty-second precinct, arrested a laborer, named John Dougherty, in a large beer saloon at No. 50 Fulton street.

TALKING ABOUT NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

Though still nearly two months before the meeting of Congress, people here are beginning to talk about what will be done next session regarding the principal subjects now occupying the public mind. These are the Cuban reconstruction, tariff and financial questions, of which some have been discussed next session, and to which some of us, of other, for the country is thoroughly sick of waiting for their solution and demands that no farther delay take place in disposing of them.

A. R. CORBIN AS A LOBBYIST.

How He Managed Members of Congress—The report of the Select Committee of the House of Representatives, of which Hon. B. Stanton was chairman, appointed to inquire into the expenditure of money for the purpose of inducing the passage of the tariff of 1867 by the thirty-fourth Congress, we find the following in relation to A. R. Corbin, who has figured so conspicuously in the recent gold ring:—

The committee reported the following sums as having been paid:—

Thurston West, $5,000; D. M. Stone, editor of the New York Journal of Commerce, 1,500; J. N. Reynolds, 1,500; A. R. Corbin, 1,500. The committee also reported that Corbin had gratification that the proofs show no member of the House to have been connected with this expenditure of money, they regret that they are under the necessity of saying that it shows that $1,000 was paid to Mr. A. R. Corbin, who was then clerk of the Committee on Claims of this House.

Mr. Corbin's testimony, however, leaves no room to doubt that the sum was paid to him for his advice and assistance, and for the advantage which his official position gave him of ready access to members of the House.

Although the leading prominent facts disclosed by his evidence do not bear very directly upon the inquiry with which the committee is charged, yet they extend to the subject of the gold ring, and are of great importance to the public mind. When Mr. Corbin is compelled to choose whether he will admit that he has received and paid out large sums of money for the purpose of corruptly influencing the legislation of Congress, or has falsely represented himself as having done so, for the purpose of obtaining money from persons interested in measures pending before Congress, he chooses the latter horn of the dilemma.

The committee produced a letter from Mr. Corbin to Samuel Lawrence, of which the following is the concluding portion:—

"I want authority, and without delay, to pledge the payment of $10,000 in cash to me in full of the amount of the bill making good and dry out of the moment has been signed by the President; of course, I mean in addition to the $25,000 heretofore agreed upon. I really believe we can pass the bill without this additional expenditure, but it is, in my opinion, the part of ordinary prudence to make the outlay, and thus secure the bill, and to pay in full of the measure so important. In case you agree with me as to the prudence of this precautionary outlay I would suggest that you should send me $5,000 in cash at once to leading parties and say, $5,000 in cash has been pledged on a solitary condition, and that is, in the event of success and the moment the President signs it, and no pay in the event of defeat.

In advance man will bear the load. After I have done for you what I have done for you, and shall have been paid therefor, it would mar the satisfaction of myself and numerous employees if we should afterwards have to pay for the bill without the liberal had to pay for it. In the commencement I told you that it was your interest to arm us thoroughly; not less than $50,000, though I would like to see you with $25,000. Perhaps now that you see that all I had the honor to tell you and your talented brother last November has been realized, you will be glad to see me on this occasion to its fullest extent, especially as I will cost you not a dollar. When I have done my plan and money never failed to achieve success, and I will be able to pay you $50,000. My plan of operations with men I prefer not to detail; can do no good to anybody.

A. R. CORBIN.
