"FOSTER'S FATE."

The Court of Appeals Refuse to Hear His Prayer for Another Trial.

How Foster Received the News from His Wife—His Utter Despondency—What Edward S. Stokes Thinks About the Decision—The Story of Foster's Crime Told.

Just as the prisoners were getting ready to eat their dinner of soup and coarse bread in the dismal tunnels yesterday a lady in deep mourning, accompanied by two children, entered the inner gate of the prison and asked to see her husband, William Foster, the murderer of Avery D. Putnam.

She walked to his cell slowly and with grief in her countenance, for she bore the dread intelligence to her husband that there was no hope for him on earth, a despatch having reached her from Albany privately that the Court of Appeals had decided in his case that he must die on the gallows for the crime he had committed.

The scene was a terrible one, and the lost man threw himself on his wretched prison pallet totally unmanned, and he wept bitterly.

Soon the dread news spread throughout the different tiers of the prison, and the muttered sympathetic utterances of his fellow prisoners reached Foster's ears.

The official despatch which carried dismay to the hearts of Foster and his family and friends was worded as follows, and was received by the late District Attorney Samuel B. Garvin, who handed it to the present District Attorney Phelps, for disposal.

To Judge Garvin— Albany, Jan. 21, 1873. In Foster case judgment affirmed, and Court below ordered to carry judgment into effect.

By the Court of Appeals. Assistant District Attorney Lynes stated to a HERALD reporter that the full text of the judgment of the Court of Appeals would reach New York city to-day, and that the District Attorney would at once move before the Court in which Foster was convicted that the judgment should be carried into execution.

Foster has always had an idea that he would be saved from the gallows, owing to the great exertions of his friends, and yesterday when the news came it struck him like a bolt from a clear sky.

Foster's cell is on the second tier, and to that place a HERALD reporter asked for admittance yesterday afternoon.

delay the former judgment was affirmed by Judges Ingraham and Brady. On the 21st of February 1873, the Court of Appeals, sitting in open Court, and was sentenced to the execution to take place on the 22nd of March, 1873.

Annual Meeting of the Exempt Firemen's Association—Relics of Natural Nobility—A Disgrace to the City.

There are few of the residents of this city who have attained the age of puberty who do not remember the old Volunteer Fire Department. True, there was much to condemn in the old department, but there was much to praise.

The association has applied for permission to meet in the hall of the Firemen's Association, but has been refused. The hall is now being used for a club, many of the members of which are not citizens.
