INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., June 25, 1875.

The Indianapolis Sun of to-morrow will contain the following letter from Wendell Phillips to James Buchanan, of this city:—

CITY, June 19, 1875.

DEAR SIR—The first clause of the Cleveland platform, adopted at March, last, is a very liberal and noble one. It is one which I am sure it will soon be adopted by the nation, and that it will secure the election of a President who will not only be a man of high character, but one who will be a man of high ability.

It will put capital beyond all danger of interference with its rights, and will immeasurably increase the comfort of workingmen. A single measure of change will do as much as this can for the happiness, virtue and progress of the nation.

It is a measure which I am sure will be adopted by the nation, and that it will secure the election of a President who will not only be a man of high character, but one who will be a man of high ability.

THE LOSS OF THE SARANAC.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 25, 1875.

The following has been received from Dr. E. Bessis, a passenger on the Saranac and Special Commissioner in the government to gather Archaic and Alaska contributions for the Centennial Exhibition:—

VICTORIA, B. C., June 25, 1875.

On striking the rock the ship hung for a few moments, careening to port so deeply as to take in a stream of water through her air ports until she again righted. For a moment only was there a little excitement, which closed at the first order of command, and the usual discipline and utmost coolness prevailed thereafter.

The marines took their stations at the boats' falls and the boats were cleared away with the same orderly promptness as exercises, while at the same time every effort was being made to run the ship on shore.

The forehold filled instantly, but the water was prevented from running aft by the coal bunkers and a bulkhead forward of the boilers. This circumstance some persons in the forehold were almost instantly in mid channel. The ship was down so much by the head on account of water in the forehold, that she became unmanageable; but, providentially, an eddy in the current headed her in the right direction and she was run on shore. A moment later her bows were put out by the water. The forehold filled and the water remained at their places till the water was knee deep. As soon as the vessel struck the shore two anchors were let go and a large hawser made fast to a tree. The shore at this point was steep and rocky, and the ship was sinking almost fastly.

The men's bags and bread and some canned beef, which were on the deck, were quickly got on shore; but the stern of the ship was steadily sinking, and in an hour from the time she struck the rock she had sunk to the water. The order was then given for every one to abandon her, which was safely accomplished. The vessel disappeared, stern foremost, in sixty fathoms of water. Her steam launch, which could not be towed ashore, was towed to the shore by the other boats. The executive officer and his family were taken ashore by the launch, and were for fifty-six hours exposed to a FITFUL STORM.

In an open boat, the Hudson Bay Company's steamer Otter, and started to the relief. Meanwhile the officers and crew of the Saranac moved from Victoria to Vancouver, and camped at the foot of Mount Soho, where there was plenty of fresh water. The Otter, however, came in sight and was built of boughs of trees, hammocks and a few boats' sails saved from the wreck. Although the Otter was a small vessel, she was well equipped with provisions, and was able to furnish the crew with food. The Otter was anchored in the small cove on the shore of which the encampment was formed, while the Otter went on and anchored in Plummer Bay, a mile distant. Upon the appearance of the Otter, the Myrionides was hoisted and orders issued to break camp and transfer everything to the Otter. The Otter, however, was unable to do so, and the Myrionides was hoisted and orders issued to break camp and transfer everything to the Otter.
