

DOUBLE OFFICE-HOLDERS.

A Startling List from Massachusetts, Tennessee, Georgia, Maryland and Louisiana.

DEMORALIZING INFLUENCES.

The Government Made Subservient to the Political Machine.

FACTS THAT TELL.

The following letters from HERALD correspondents explain themselves. They show what persons in the States mentioned are at the same time federal office-holders and members of the State Central and other committees of the party in power, and who are thus combining the government organization with the party machinery.

MASSACHUSETTS.

The following are members of the Republican State Central Committee in Massachusetts:— William A. Simmons, Collector of the Port of Boston. Fitz J. Babson, Collector of the Port of Gloucester. George S. Merrill (secretary), Postmaster at Lawrence. James S. Lewis, of Lynn, inspector in Boston Custom House. Charles H. Leach, of Boston, inspector in Boston Custom House. C. C. Dame, of Newburyport, Collector of Internal Revenue.

TENNESSEE.

The following is a list of federal office-holders in Tennessee who hold positions on committees of the republican party:— Dr. D. B. Clift, Franklin, United States Revenue Collector, Fifth district, chairman of the State Republican Executive Committee and member of the Williamson County Executive Committee.

William R. Kuy, Knoxville, Postmaster, member State Republican Executive Committee. Hon. W. J. Smith, Memphis, Surveyor of Customs, member of State Republican Executive Committee.

John D. Wilson, Murfreesboro, Postmaster, member State Republican Executive Committee. J. W. C. Bryant, Shelbyville, Deputy Revenue Collector, member State Republican Executive Committee.

A. A. Freeman, Brownsville, solicitor in Post Office Department, Washington, D. C., member State Executive Committee.

T. E. Elliot, United States Pension Agent at Nashville, Treasurer of the State Republican Executive Committee.

These federal office holders of Davidson county, Tenn., are members of the County Republican Executive Committee:— John Lawrence, Register in Bankruptcy, chairman. Ferdinand Pfister, Deputy Revenue Collector, secretary. Edward S. Jones, Steamboat Inspector. M. L. Higgins, in the revenue service. T. A. Sykes, gauger.

E. S. Jones is also a member of the Congressional Committee of the Sixth district. A. S. Moss, Franklin, Postmaster, member of the Williamson County Republican Executive Committee. S. Reisinger, Clarksville, Postmaster, chairman Montgomery County Republican Executive Committee. Dr. W. F. Green, Clarksville, Deputy Revenue Collector, member of the above committee.

A. G. Sharpe, Chattanooga, special agent in Post Office Department, chairman of Republican Executive Committee of the Third Congressional district.

H. J. Springfield, Tyler's Station, Hamilton county, Postmaster, member of County Republican Executive Committee.

Shelby County Republican Executive Committee contains:— William J. Smith, Surveyor of Customs, chairman. S. S. Garrett, United States Commissioner, secretary. L. G. Gardner, United States Inspector of Hulls. James Ralston, United States Inspector of Rollers. R. F. Patterson, Collector of Internal Revenue. W. J. Dowell, Benton, United States Commissioner, chairman of Polk County Republican Executive Committee.

MEMBERS OF STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE:— J. E. Bryant, chairman, for many years Custom House official. A. M. Wilson, Custom House, Savannah. J. M. Sims, Custom House, Savannah.

G. B. Chamberlain, Internal Revenue Agent, Atlanta. Nathan S. Fannin, Internal Revenue Agent, Augusta. Richard S. Taylor, Postmaster, Athens. Edwin Belcher, Postal Route Agent. F. F. Palmer, Deputy Collector, Internal Revenue, Albany.

L. B. Toomer, Custom House official, Savannah. A. E. Buck, Clerk of United States Court, Atlanta. Andrew Clark, Collector Internal Revenue, Atlanta. R. W. White, Postal Route Agent. J. H. Dyer, Postmaster, Admireville, Ga. H. P. Farron, United States District Attorney, Atlanta.

James Atkins, Collector Internal Revenue, Savannah. Z. B. Hargrave, Postmaster, Rome. E. C. Wade, Deputy Collector Internal Revenue, Outhbert. W. H. Smyth, United States Marshal. Benjamin Conley, Postmaster, Atlanta. J. T. Collins, Collector Post, Brunswick. David Porter, Custom House official, Savannah.

L. M. Piesant, Custom House official. W. T. Croft, Postmaster, Mail Agent. C. W. Arnold, Postmaster, Albany. John R. Hoy, House Agent. John W. Parker, Register in Bankruptcy. J. M. Ward, Postmaster, West Point. A. T. Calhoun, Postal Service. John T. Collins, Collector Internal Revenue (latey removed).

Samuel Gory, United States Commissioner. George Wall, Postal Route Agent. R. S. Glover, Postmaster, Macon. J. A. Glenn, Postmaster, Dalton. R. W. Wickie, Postmaster, Cartersville. M. R. Archer, Postmaster, Gainesville. Samuel Sheets, United States Claim Agent. G. M. Prince, Postmaster, Augusta. C. H. Ruff, Special Deputy Revenue Collector. W. A. Blue, Surrogate Internal Revenue Department.

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT COMMITTEE (GEORGIA). J. H. DeVaux, Custom House, Savannah. L. B. Toomer, Custom House, Savannah. J. Atkins, Collector Internal Revenue, Savannah. D. Porter, Custom House, Savannah. C. L. DeLovalle, Custom House, Savannah. J. T. Collins, Collector Post, Brunswick. A. N. Wilson, Appraiser Customs, Savannah. D. F. Moore, Deputy Collector Internal Revenue.

SECOND CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT COMMITTEE. Mr. Brimberry, Collector Internal Revenue, Camilla. W. F. Pierce, Post Office official. D. C. Wade, Deputy Collector of Revenue. Ducas Jordan, Postmaster, Outhbert.

BENJAMIN COLLEY, Postmaster, Atlanta. D. S. Spencer, Deputy United States Marshal. George Ware, Deputy Collector Internal Revenue. J. S. Mill, Assistant Postmaster, Atlanta. George L. Thomas, Assistant District Attorney. Jesse Jackson, Internal Revenue Agent. There are no committees in the Third, Fourth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth districts.

MARYLAND. The following are the members of the Maryland Republican State Central Committee who are now holding office under the federal government:— Charles Gulph, of Allegany county, Surveyor of Customs, Baltimore. Gratiano Moore, of Anne Arundel county, Assistant Postmaster at Annapolis. W. H. Dorsey, of Anne Arundel county, Inspector at Baltimore Custom House. James T. Cook, of Baltimore city, Internal Revenue gauger. Archibald Striving, Jr., of Baltimore city, United States District Attorney. Samuel M. Evans, of Baltimore city, Inspector at Baltimore Custom House.

THE LITTLE MUDDY.

Details of General Miles' Last Brilliant Victory.

GREAT SLAUGHTER OF INDIANS.

Gallant Conduct of the Troops and Destruction of the Village.

THE AMERICAN PILGRIMS.

ON THE DANUBE.

FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES AMONG RUSSIAN OFFICERS—THE CAUSE AND THE PRINCIPALITY—SNUBBING THE ROMANIAN GENERALS MORE TURKISH MASSACRES—A GRAND BARRAGE PRESENTATION.

Everybody abroad bears of the wealth of the Russians. But in order for one to be rid of these illusions it is only necessary to visit the great depots of the Bucharest restaurateurs, where only the best of the city is to be seen, and where the highest to the lowest, they could not pay for the smallest luxuries of a danubian balling from the manners theatre of the Pamborg. It was stated that they were to be paid half in gold and half in silver, but in truth they are paid in paper money, for every four francs of which they can get but two francs and sixty centimes.

These poor Russians, who are nearly better than the first comers, Brown or Jones, when they come to take their real rank here. The restaurant keeper has only one hope—namely, in the Wallachian prices who stroll around here in a listless, uneasy manner. With eyes that seem to be searching into the very soul, each innkeeper watches them as though looking for the first chance to drain the last cent. Go into a "public house" and you will see from ten to twenty, thirty prices—but the landlord looks only for the boys who can pay up.

PRINCE CHARLES AND DUKE CONSTANTINE. There has been but little stirring to interest people here. There was a hope that the Gorman Prince, whose presence here has given rise to these internal quarrels, would be replaced; but this delusion has been swept away, for following closely on the heels of the Duke Constantine was the announcement that the Gorman Prince himself is coming and will arrive at Ploesti on the 6th of June. Prince Charles has, meanwhile, departed the little power he has left foot by foot with tenacity, but his administration seems to be gradually drifting into that middle where it may be lost in a morass of detail which is becoming more and more embarrassing.

At first it was decided that the Grand Duke Constantine should travel without an escort. However, the Russian generalissimo has consented to grant him this force, but while giving him the force and the force he intended to have Constantine daily installed at Bucharest. The reigning prince replied that his palace was too small, whereupon His Highness retorted that they could entertain themselves at Cotogeni, the summer residence of Prince Charles. The Prussian made a grimace. "You will certainly have your guards around your house," said he; "but, confound it, what shall I be able to do?" The Roumanian soldiers would occupy the marches, to which they are accustomed. But should I be able to do so, exposure to the rigors of the rainy season? It would seem but right that the Russian authorities should order a guard to watch the interior of the chateau; but then the Roumanians would still hold the ramparts without. Getting somewhat tired of this long discussion, the Grand Duke Nicholas brought it to a close by this expression—"It seems to be decidedly apropos to annoy me just now."

THE CAUSE CHANGES ITS SITUATION. "Things were in this middle when the arrival of the Gorman Prince was announced. No time was lost. Prince Charles started immediately for Ploesti, where he remains at the moment of closing this letter. So long as he had only a prince to deal with everything was well enough and they could treat on matters in general from time to time, but now that "majesty" has come His Highness must adopt another plan. The court has commenced to show a little uneasiness. Questions of precedence are continually arising, which always result in favor of the Russians, for a very simple reason, and these little Roumanians appoint colonels to command their divisions and brigades generally, to command their regiments, and to command the companies obedient to the usual custom, besides the change of their divisions to generals of divisions, and place their army corps under the control of general-in-chief. Thus, although the Roumanians have equal rank, they always receive an inferior title, and their Russian colleagues treat them accordingly, from the highest to the lowest.

ANOTHER QUESTION HAS BEEN RAISED HAVING SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE POSITIONS OCCUPIED BY THE TWO ARMIES. It has been a question of some interest, and one which the Roumanians and the other Russian, should first get the salute on meeting? The Russians allege that as they cannot speak the Roumanian tongue it would be impossible for them to salute, and that they would do so at a distance; but the Roumanians, who are not so backward, say that they should salute the sign of the cross, proving that they are Christians and also to prevent being mistaken for Turks.

EVERY DAY THE INVADERS ARE SEEN TO GAIN IN REAL AUTHORITY, and by the march of the Danube they are assuming occupation also. The Roumanians take their revenge the best way they can—that is to say, on those that have not 300,000 men at their disposal. They do not dare to do so, but they are authorized by the Russian general staff to give some of their army to the Roumanians. This is a so-called "loan" of troops, and the other day they were much annoyed by some of these people arriving at Oltenia, who were not a regular unit, but for some time they were subjected to a terrible fire. The truth was that a single shell, which a passing monitor had thrown to them out of pure politeness, no doubt, and fallen in the midst of the batteries, which did not reply under the pretext that in the Turkish town of Turukoi, on the other side of the river, were several Christian inquisitors whom they did want to run the risk of killing by mistake.

MORE TURKISH MASSACRES. This argument reminds one of the saying of a captain of the National Guard in 1848, when he was ordered to the advanced posts during the siege. One of his men had fired his rifle off in the direction of the French camp, and the other said, "That's all right, the captain, but you must be careful, for the other hand, acting with less delicacy, seeing that the fire of their batteries of Turukoi, did not reach the position of the Danubian batteries, they made up for their deficiency during the night by massing those who fell into their hands, and they were not long in doing so. The cries of the living re-echoed during the whole night. Soon two Bulgarian swam across the river and told the whole story of what had occurred. These Bulgarian had been the only ones who had not been killed, and they were the only ones who had been left to tell the story. They were the only ones who had been left to tell the story. They were the only ones who had been left to tell the story.

THE TURKS, as a matter of course, continue their little massacre. The Roumanians had neglected to take the coast guards, who are stationed in posts of three or four miles along the Danube, and the other day some Turks having crossed the river to Jera-Jolonia, between Ibrai and Calarcea, they were not long in doing so. The unfortunate man, who was stretched on the ground, and seeing that his victim still breathed, he ordered his men to shoot him. This manner of conducting the war does no good, because it may be already affirmed, and will continue to be affirmed, that the Roumanians will take no prisoners and will kill all who fall into their hands. Henceforward the Roumanian soldiers, no matter what may be the orders of their officers, will do the same, and extermination will become the basis of the law of this war.

THE QUESTION IS ASKED IN REGARD TO THIS POINT, What will be the result of the Danubian campaign? or which are brave but whose officers are miserably inefficient? It is reported that the number of English officers who are to be found on the Danube is increasing each day, and that they are already in "six months" furlough. Such is their position toward the British War Office.

ALL SIDES WE SEE PREPARATION, and there is no Slavonic people which does not supply a contingent. Yesterday I witnessed a review in honor of the 2,500 Bulgarians, who were to be sent to the Grand Duke Nicholas presented a flag sent by their local chieftains. This flag, which was a horizontal tricolor of red, white and blue, was placed on the middle of the break over the image of the Virgin, and the cross, "May God reign and his enemies perish." The flag was hoisted, and the music of brass instruments was played, and the flag was kept in its place by the weight of three bayonets laid upon it. The Grand Duke Constantine arrived in a carriage and passed over the bridge, and the troops. Then three pipes came and blessed the standard. Then the Prince approached, took some silver from a plate and filed the flag to the wind in the morning. A sergeant and a private soldier took their places beside him, and the sergeant being in the center, it was the latter that presented the standard to the Grand Duke, because in the Russian army the standard bearers are simply non-commissioned officers, contrary to the practice prevailing in other armies.

At the moment the brother of the Gorman Prince uttered some energetic words, which were responded to by three loud hurrahs from all the troops, while the soldiers threw the standard to the air. The ceremony terminated with a march past.

THE COURIER DID NOT ARRIVE YESTERDAY, because a part of the railroad near the bridge was constructed, and the road will be repaired to-morrow.

THE AMERICAN PILGRIMS.

ON THE DANUBE.

FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES AMONG RUSSIAN OFFICERS—THE CAUSE AND THE PRINCIPALITY—SNUBBING THE ROMANIAN GENERALS MORE TURKISH MASSACRES—A GRAND BARRAGE PRESENTATION.

EVERYBODY ABROAD BEARS OF THE WEALTH OF THE RUSSIANS. But in order for one to be rid of these illusions it is only necessary to visit the great depots of the Bucharest restaurateurs, where only the best of the city is to be seen, and where the highest to the lowest, they could not pay for the smallest luxuries of a danubian balling from the manners theatre of the Pamborg. It was stated that they were to be paid half in gold and half in silver, but in truth they are paid in paper money, for every four francs of which they can get but two francs and sixty centimes.

These poor Russians, who are nearly better than the first comers, Brown or Jones, when they come to take their real rank here. The restaurant keeper has only one hope—namely, in the Wallachian prices who stroll around here in a listless, uneasy manner. With eyes that seem to be searching into the very soul, each innkeeper watches them as though looking for the first chance to drain the last cent. Go into a "public house" and you will see from ten to twenty, thirty prices—but the landlord looks only for the boys who can pay up.

PRINCE CHARLES AND DUKE CONSTANTINE. There has been but little stirring to interest people here. There was a hope that the Gorman Prince, whose presence here has given rise to these internal quarrels, would be replaced; but this delusion has been swept away, for following closely on the heels of the Duke Constantine was the announcement that the Gorman Prince himself is coming and will arrive at Ploesti on the 6th of June. Prince Charles has, meanwhile, departed the little power he has left foot by foot with tenacity, but his administration seems to be gradually drifting into that middle where it may be lost in a morass of detail which is becoming more and more embarrassing.

At first it was decided that the Grand Duke Constantine should travel without an escort. However, the Russian generalissimo has consented to grant him this force, but while giving him the force and the force he intended to have Constantine daily installed at Bucharest. The reigning prince replied that his palace was too small, whereupon His Highness retorted that they could entertain themselves at Cotogeni, the summer residence of Prince Charles. The Prussian made a grimace. "You will certainly have your guards around your house," said he; "but, confound it, what shall I be able to do?" The Roumanian soldiers would occupy the marches, to which they are accustomed. But should I be able to do so, exposure to the rigors of the rainy season? It would seem but right that the Russian authorities should order a guard to watch the interior of the chateau; but then the Roumanians would still hold the ramparts without. Getting somewhat tired of this long discussion, the Grand Duke Nicholas brought it to a close by this expression—"It seems to be decidedly apropos to annoy me just now."

THE CAUSE CHANGES ITS SITUATION. "Things were in this middle when the arrival of the Gorman Prince was announced. No time was lost. Prince Charles started immediately for Ploesti, where he remains at the moment of closing this letter. So long as he had only a prince to deal with everything was well enough and they could treat on matters in general from time to time, but now that "majesty" has come His Highness must adopt another plan. The court has commenced to show a little uneasiness. Questions of precedence are continually arising, which always result in favor of the Russians, for a very simple reason, and these little Roumanians appoint colonels to command their divisions and brigades generally, to command their regiments, and to command the companies obedient to the usual custom, besides the change of their divisions to generals of divisions, and place their army corps under the control of general-in-chief. Thus, although the Roumanians have equal rank, they always receive an inferior title, and their Russian colleagues treat them accordingly, from the highest to the lowest.

ANOTHER QUESTION HAS BEEN RAISED HAVING SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE POSITIONS OCCUPIED BY THE TWO ARMIES. It has been a question of some interest, and one which the Roumanians and the other Russian, should first get the salute on meeting? The Russians allege that as they cannot speak the Roumanian tongue it would be impossible for them to salute, and that they would do so at a distance; but the Roumanians, who are not so backward, say that they should salute the sign of the cross, proving that they are Christians and also to prevent being mistaken for Turks.

EVERY DAY THE INVADERS ARE SEEN TO GAIN IN REAL AUTHORITY, and by the march of the Danube they are assuming occupation also. The Roumanians take their revenge the best way they can—that is to say, on those that have not 300,000 men at their disposal. They do not dare to do so, but they are authorized by the Russian general staff to give some of their army to the Roumanians. This is a so-called "loan" of troops, and the other day they were much annoyed by some of these people arriving at Oltenia, who were not a regular unit, but for some time they were subjected to a terrible fire. The truth was that a single shell, which a passing monitor had thrown to them out of pure politeness, no doubt, and fallen in the midst of the batteries, which did not reply under the pretext that in the Turkish town of Turukoi, on the other side of the river, were several Christian inquisitors whom they did want to run the risk of killing by mistake.

MORE TURKISH MASSACRES. This argument reminds one of the saying of a captain of the National Guard in 1848, when he was ordered to the advanced posts during the siege. One of his men had fired his rifle off in the direction of the French camp, and the other said, "That's all right, the captain, but you must be careful, for the other hand, acting with less delicacy, seeing that the fire of their batteries of Turukoi, did not reach the position of the Danubian batteries, they made up for their deficiency during the night by massing those who fell into their hands, and they were not long in doing so. The cries of the living re-echoed during the whole night. Soon two Bulgarian swam across the river and told the whole story of what had occurred. These Bulgarian had been the only ones who had not been killed, and they were the only ones who had been left to tell the story. They were the only ones who had been left to tell the story. They were the only ones who had been left to tell the story.

THE TURKS, as a matter of course, continue their little massacre. The Roumanians had neglected to take the coast guards, who are stationed in posts of three or four miles along the Danube, and the other day some Turks having crossed the river to Jera-Jolonia, between Ibrai and Calarcea, they were not long in doing so. The unfortunate man, who was stretched on the ground, and seeing that his victim still breathed, he ordered his men to shoot him. This manner of conducting the war does no good, because it may be already affirmed, and will continue to be affirmed, that the Roumanians will take no prisoners and will kill all who fall into their hands. Henceforward the Roumanian soldiers, no matter what may be the orders of their officers, will do the same, and extermination will become the basis of the law of this war.

THE QUESTION IS ASKED IN REGARD TO THIS POINT, What will be the result of the Danubian campaign? or which are brave but whose officers are miserably inefficient? It is reported that the number of English officers who are to be found on the Danube is increasing each day, and that they are already in "six months" furlough. Such is their position toward the British War Office.

ALL SIDES WE SEE PREPARATION, and there is no Slavonic people which does not supply a contingent. Yesterday I witnessed a review in honor of the 2,500 Bulgarians, who were to be sent to the Grand Duke Nicholas presented a flag sent by their local chieftains. This flag, which was a horizontal tricolor of red, white and blue, was placed on the middle of the break over the image of the Virgin, and the cross, "May God reign and his enemies perish." The flag was hoisted, and the music of brass instruments was played, and the flag was kept in its place by the weight of three bayonets laid upon it. The Grand Duke Constantine arrived in a carriage and passed over the bridge, and the troops. Then three pipes came and blessed the standard. Then the Prince approached, took some silver from a plate and filed the flag to the wind in the morning. A sergeant and a private soldier took their places beside him, and the sergeant being in the center, it was the latter that presented the standard to the Grand Duke, because in the Russian army the standard bearers are simply non-commissioned officers, contrary to the practice prevailing in other armies.

At the moment the brother of the Gorman Prince uttered some energetic words, which were responded to by three loud hurrahs from all the troops, while the soldiers threw the standard to the air. The ceremony terminated with a march past.

THE COURIER DID NOT ARRIVE YESTERDAY, because a part of the railroad near the bridge was constructed, and the road will be repaired to-morrow.

THE AMERICAN PILGRIMS.

ON THE DANUBE.

FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES AMONG RUSSIAN OFFICERS—THE CAUSE AND THE PRINCIPALITY—SNUBBING THE ROMANIAN GENERALS MORE TURKISH MASSACRES—A GRAND BARRAGE PRESENTATION.

EVERYBODY ABROAD BEARS OF THE WEALTH OF THE RUSSIANS. But in order for one to be rid of these illusions it is only necessary to visit the great depots of the Bucharest restaurateurs, where only the best of the city is to be seen, and where the highest to the lowest, they could not pay for the smallest luxuries of a danubian balling from the manners theatre of the Pamborg. It was stated that they were to be paid half in gold and half in silver, but in truth they are paid in paper money, for every four francs of which they can get but two francs and sixty centimes.

These poor Russians, who are nearly better than the first comers, Brown or Jones, when they come to take their real rank here. The restaurant keeper has only one hope—namely, in the Wallachian prices who stroll around here in a listless, uneasy manner. With eyes that seem to be searching into the very soul, each innkeeper watches them as though looking for the first chance to drain the last cent. Go into a "public house" and you will see from ten to twenty, thirty prices—but the landlord looks only for the boys who can pay up.

PRINCE CHARLES AND DUKE CONSTANTINE. There has been but little stirring to interest people here. There was a hope that the Gorman Prince, whose presence here has given rise to these internal quarrels, would be replaced; but this delusion has been swept away, for following closely on the heels of the Duke Constantine was the announcement that the Gorman Prince himself is coming and will arrive at Ploesti on the 6th of June. Prince Charles has, meanwhile, departed the little power he has left foot by foot with tenacity, but his administration seems to be gradually drifting into that middle where it may be lost in a morass of detail which is becoming more and more embarrassing.

At first it was decided that the Grand Duke Constantine should travel without an escort. However, the Russian generalissimo has consented to grant him this force, but while giving him the force and the force he intended to have Constantine daily installed at Bucharest. The reigning prince replied that his palace was too small, whereupon His Highness retorted that they could entertain themselves at Cotogeni, the summer residence of Prince Charles. The Prussian made a grimace. "You will certainly have your guards around your house," said he; "but, confound it, what shall I be able to do?" The Roumanian soldiers would occupy the marches, to which they are accustomed. But should I be able to do so, exposure to the rigors of the rainy season? It would seem but right that the Russian authorities should order a guard to watch the interior of the chateau; but then the Roumanians would still hold the ramparts without. Getting somewhat tired of this long discussion, the Grand Duke Nicholas brought it to a close by this expression—"It seems to be decidedly apropos to annoy me just now."

THE CAUSE CHANGES ITS SITUATION. "Things were in this middle when the arrival of the Gorman Prince was announced. No time was lost. Prince Charles started immediately for Ploesti, where he remains at the moment of closing this letter. So long as he had only a prince to deal with everything was well enough and they could treat on matters in general from time to time, but now that "majesty" has come His Highness must adopt another plan. The court has commenced to show a little uneasiness. Questions of precedence are continually arising, which always result in favor of the Russians, for a very simple reason, and these little Roumanians appoint colonels to command their divisions and brigades generally, to command their regiments, and to command the companies obedient to the usual custom, besides the change of their divisions to generals of divisions, and place their army corps under the control of general-in-chief. Thus, although the Roumanians have equal rank, they always receive an inferior title, and their Russian colleagues treat them accordingly, from the highest to the lowest.

ANOTHER QUESTION HAS BEEN RAISED HAVING SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE POSITIONS OCCUPIED BY THE TWO ARMIES. It has been a question of some interest, and one which the Roumanians and the other Russian, should first get the salute on meeting? The Russians allege that as they cannot speak the Roumanian tongue it would be impossible for them to salute, and that they would do so at a distance; but the Roumanians, who are not so backward, say that they should salute the sign of the cross, proving that they are Christians and also to prevent being mistaken for Turks.

EVERY DAY THE INVADERS ARE SEEN TO GAIN IN REAL AUTHORITY, and by the march of the Danube they are assuming occupation also. The Roumanians take their revenge the best way they can—that is to say, on those that have not 300,000 men at their disposal. They do not dare to do so, but they are authorized by the Russian general staff to give some of their army to the Roumanians. This is a so-called "loan" of troops, and the other day they were much annoyed by some of these people arriving at Oltenia, who were not a regular unit, but for some time they were subjected to a terrible fire. The truth was that a single shell, which a passing monitor had thrown to them out of pure politeness, no doubt, and fallen in the midst of the batteries, which did not reply under the pretext that in the Turkish town of Turukoi, on the other side of the river, were several Christian inquisitors whom they did want to run the risk of killing by mistake.

MORE TURKISH MASSACRES. This argument reminds one of the saying of a captain of the National Guard in 1848, when he was ordered to the advanced posts during the siege. One of his men had fired his rifle off in the direction of the French camp, and the other said, "That's all right, the captain, but you must be careful, for the other hand, acting with less delicacy, seeing that the fire of their batteries of Turukoi, did not reach the position of the Danubian batteries, they made up for their deficiency during the night by massing those who fell into their hands, and they were not long in doing so. The cries of the living re-echoed during the whole night. Soon two Bulgarian swam across the river and told the whole story of what had occurred. These Bulgarian had been the only ones who had not been killed, and they were the only ones who had been left to tell the story. They were the only ones who had been left to tell the story. They were the only ones who had been left to tell the story.

THE TURKS, as a matter of course, continue their little massacre. The Roumanians had neglected to take the coast guards, who are stationed in posts of three or four miles along the Danube, and the other day some Turks having crossed the river to Jera-Jolonia, between Ibrai and Calarcea, they were not long in doing so. The unfortunate man, who was stretched on the ground, and seeing that his victim still breathed, he ordered his men to shoot him. This manner of conducting the war does no good, because it may be already affirmed, and will continue to be affirmed, that the Roumanians will take no prisoners and will kill all who fall into their hands. Henceforward the Roumanian soldiers, no matter what may be the orders of their officers, will do the same, and extermination will become the basis of the law of this war.

THE QUESTION IS ASKED IN REGARD TO THIS POINT, What will be the result of the Danubian campaign? or which are brave but whose officers are miserably inefficient? It is reported that the number of English officers who are to be found on the Danube is increasing each day, and that they are already in "six months" furlough. Such is their position toward the British War Office.

ALL SIDES WE SEE PREPARATION, and there is no Slavonic people which does not supply a contingent. Yesterday I witnessed a review in honor of the 2,500 Bulgarians, who were to be sent to the Grand Duke Nicholas presented a flag sent by their local chieftains. This flag, which was a horizontal tricolor of red, white and blue, was placed on the middle of the break over the image of the Virgin, and the cross, "May God reign and his enemies perish." The flag was hoisted, and the music of brass instruments was played, and the flag was kept in its place by the weight of three bayonets laid upon it. The Grand Duke Constantine arrived in a carriage and passed over the bridge, and the troops. Then three pipes came and blessed the standard. Then the Prince approached, took some silver from a plate and filed the flag to the wind in the morning. A sergeant and a private soldier took their places beside him, and the sergeant being in the center, it was the latter that presented the standard to the Grand Duke, because in the Russian army the standard bearers are simply non-commissioned officers, contrary to the practice prevailing in other armies.

At the moment the brother of the Gorman Prince uttered some energetic words, which were responded to by three loud hurrahs from all the troops, while the soldiers threw the standard to the air. The ceremony terminated with a march past.

THE COURIER DID NOT ARRIVE YESTERDAY, because a part of the railroad near the bridge was constructed, and the road will be repaired to-morrow.

THE AMERICAN PILGRIMS.

ON THE DANUBE.

FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES AMONG RUSSIAN OFFICERS—THE CAUSE AND THE PRINCIPALITY—SNUBBING THE ROMANIAN GENERALS MORE TURKISH MASSACRES—A GRAND BARRAGE PRESENTATION.

EVERYBODY ABROAD BEARS OF THE WEALTH OF THE RUSSIANS. But in order for one to be rid of these illusions it is only necessary to visit the great depots of the Bucharest restaurateurs, where only the best of the city is to be seen, and where the highest to the lowest, they could not pay for the smallest luxuries of a danubian balling from the manners theatre of the Pamborg. It was stated that they were to be paid half in gold and half in silver, but in truth they are paid in paper money, for every four francs of which they can get but two francs and sixty centimes.

These poor Russians, who are nearly better than the first comers, Brown or Jones, when they come to take their real rank here. The restaurant keeper has only one hope—namely, in the Wallachian prices who stroll around here in a listless, uneasy manner. With eyes that seem to be searching into the very soul, each innkeeper watches them as though looking for the first chance to drain the last cent. Go into a "public house" and you will see from ten to twenty, thirty prices—but the landlord looks only for the boys who can pay up.

PRINCE CHARLES AND DUKE CONSTANTINE. There has been but little stirring to interest people here. There was a hope that the Gorman Prince, whose presence here has given rise to these internal quarrels, would be replaced; but this delusion has been swept away, for following closely on the heels of the Duke Constantine was the announcement that the Gorman Prince himself is coming and will arrive at Ploesti on the 6th of June. Prince Charles has, meanwhile, departed the little power he has left foot by foot with tenacity, but his administration seems to be gradually drifting into that middle where it may be lost in a morass of detail which is becoming more and more embarrassing.

At first it was decided that the Grand Duke Constantine should travel without an escort. However, the Russian generalissimo has consented to grant him this force, but while giving him the force and the force he intended to have Constantine daily installed at Bucharest. The reigning prince replied that his palace was too small, whereupon His Highness retorted that they could entertain themselves at Cotogeni, the summer residence of Prince Charles. The Prussian made a grimace. "You will certainly have your guards around your house," said he; "but, confound it, what shall I be able to do?" The Roumanian soldiers would occupy the marches, to which they are accustomed. But should I be able to do so, exposure to the rigors of the rainy season? It would seem but right that the Russian authorities should order a guard to watch the interior of the chateau; but then the Roumanians would still hold the ramparts without. Getting somewhat tired of this long discussion, the Grand Duke Nicholas brought it to a close by this expression—"It seems to be decidedly apropos to annoy me just now."

THE CAUSE CHANGES ITS SITUATION. "Things were in this middle when the arrival of the Gorman Prince was announced. No time was lost. Prince Charles started immediately for Ploesti, where he remains at the moment of closing this letter. So long as he had only a prince to deal with everything was well enough and they could treat on matters in general from time to time, but now that "majesty" has come His Highness must adopt another plan. The court has commenced to show a little uneasiness. Questions of precedence are continually arising, which always result in favor of the Russians, for a very simple reason, and these little Roumanians appoint colonels to command their divisions and brigades generally, to command their regiments, and to command the companies obedient to the usual custom, besides the change of their divisions to generals of divisions, and place their army corps under the control of general-in-chief. Thus, although the Roumanians have equal rank, they always receive an inferior title, and their Russian colleagues treat them accordingly, from the highest to the lowest.

ANOTHER QUESTION HAS BEEN RAISED HAVING SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE POSITIONS OCCUPIED BY THE TWO ARMIES. It has been a question of some interest, and one which the Roumanians and the other Russian, should first get the salute on meeting? The Russians allege that as they cannot speak the Roumanian tongue it would be impossible for them to salute, and that they would do so at a distance; but the Roumanians, who are not so backward, say that they should salute the sign of the cross, proving that they are Christians and also to prevent being mistaken for Turks.

EVERY DAY THE INVADERS ARE SEEN TO GAIN IN REAL AUTHORITY, and by the march of the Danube they are assuming occupation also. The Roumanians take their revenge the best way they can—that is to say, on those that have not 300,000 men at their disposal. They do not dare to do so, but they are authorized by the Russian general staff to give some of their army to the Roumanians. This is a so-called "loan" of troops, and the other day they were much annoyed by some of these people arriving at Oltenia, who were not a regular unit, but for some time they were subjected to a terrible fire. The truth was that a single shell, which a passing monitor had thrown to them out of pure politeness, no doubt, and fallen in the midst of the batteries, which did not reply under the pretext that in the Turkish town of Turukoi, on the other side of the river, were several Christian inquisitors whom they did want to run the risk of killing by mistake.

MORE TURKISH MASSACRES. This argument reminds one of the saying of a captain of the National Guard in 1848, when he was ordered to the advanced posts during the siege. One of his men had fired his rifle off in the direction of the French camp, and the other said, "That's all right, the captain, but you must be careful, for the other hand, acting with less delicacy, seeing that the fire of their batteries of Turukoi, did not reach the position of the Danubian batteries, they made up for their deficiency during the night by massing those who fell into their hands, and they were not long in doing so. The cries of the living re-echoed during the whole night. Soon two Bulgarian swam across the river and told the whole story of what had occurred. These Bulgarian had been the only ones who had not been killed, and they were the only ones who had been left to tell the story. They were the only ones who had been left to tell the