

HOBOKEN'S SECRET STILL TELL HER OWN

Reporter Sent to Look Into Marriage Runners Looks Into Cafe Instead.

SEES PISTACHIO BUILDING

Thrown Out of Station by Policeman for Asking "Why So Many Saloons?"

One reason that next to nothing will be said here about the abolishment of marriage runners in Hoboken is that Old Judge McCormick, who is the managing editor and everything of the Hudson (county) Observer, asked a reporter for The Sun particularly yesterday afternoon to make next to nothing of Hoboken's scandal.

Still another reason why the facts about the abolishment of marriage runners will be next door to obliterated herein is that the reporter who was sent over to Hoboken took almost no interest in the assignment, largely because he starts out to-day for the Maine woods on his vacation. This item of news may be of little interest to the more or less casual reader, but, believe it or not, it's of tremendous interest to what the Hudson Observer and Old Judge McCormick call ye scribe.

But to come back to the Hudson Observer's crusade against marriage runners: "Following the disclosures during the past week," says the Observer's front page yesterday, "in the Hudson Observer, Director of Public Safety McCooly stated this morning that it is his intention to put a stop to a public scandal running game in Hoboken. As things are at present Hoboken is earning for itself an unenviable reputation that is not only a disgrace to the city as a whole. We are not going to allow any gang of men to besmirch the name and fame of the city and carry on a business that amounts to a public scandal. We will have these men barred from the City Hall, and if they attempt to enter the hall or to go into the office of the Registrar we will have them arrested as disorderly persons."

Nourishment Handy. "This thing should be looked into," said a boss who knitted brows along Park row late yesterday afternoon. "Go over to Hoboken and look into it. It's very important." "Oh, it is, is it, boss?" "Yes, it is. On your way." "But it doesn't appeal to me, boss."

"Absolutely no. However, if you insist." The Hoboken City Hall is a chocolate and vanilla colored building at Washington and Newark streets. The balconies are vanilla colored, but the stone columns and other trimmings are chocolate. Directly across the street one has one's choice of two sources of nourishment—one may enter the City Hall cafe at 87 Washington street or Borden's dairy at 89 Washington street.

Enter Freddy Phingie. So there was nothing left to be done except to go over to the City Hall cafe and get a back seat under an electric fan. In came Freddy Phingie. Freddy was all rigged out in a khaki shooting coat, khaki trousers and high lace boots that hid in the shadows. He was headed for Maine, said Freddy, for the first time in his life.

The Manhattan visitor to Hoboken thespoon explained that there were six trousers and coat were all right, but that the high boots were all wrong. High boots are a desirable part of a camper's equipment in the winter, but was told, but altogether out of place during July and August.

Along toward 7 o'clock everybody—it should be explained that there were six in the party now seated around the big circular table in the northeast corner of the back room of the City Hall cafe—along toward 7 o'clock everybody decided that the only way to settle the argument was to go out to the first cabin and put it up to Harry Frits, the barkeep, whether high boots should be worn in a Maine camp in the summer. Harry said anybody could search him for the answer.

"That's perfectly fair," everybody agreed, and it was then decided upon to go over to the Observer office and ask Judge McCormick how his paper's great exposé of marriage runners was coming along. It so happened that the managing editor of the Observer was in. But once the object of the visit of the delegation was put up to him, he started with tears in his eyes that the matter be dropped. It was one thing, said the Judge, for the Observer to make a fight in its news columns to wipe out the marriage runner system, but, the Judge continued, it was something else again to make the scandal public.

Everybody stood around then for a while in the Judge's office and finally Freddy Phingie broke the silence by suggesting that the whole party go down to River street and have a German lingers interned along the water front. Some of the party expressed a doubt as to whether the party would be permitted to get aboard the ships, but Freddy Phingie said he could attend to that. So everybody embraced Judge McCormick and said good-by to him and started for the ships and went back to the City Hall cafe.

A Pousse Cafe Structure. The Observer Building, by the way, is a sort of pousse cafe structure—if that's of any interest to anybody. It starts out on the Newark street level with a lot of green alone, next is made up of layers of cream colored brick, then merges to red, and is topped off with dark brown and gold. It might, in fact, be called a pistachio building. But be that as it may, the fact remains that back in the City Hall cafe one of the party—was a fat man wearing a shepherd's plaid suit who answered to the name of Sam, but didn't reveal his last name—began to cry because the Spaniards had sent Christopher Columbus back to Spain in chains and that the great discoverer into a prison cell.
