

REMINISCENCES OF OTHER DAYS

Illustration of the late John D. Crimmins

A birdseye view of New York and Brooklyn about 1850, with Castle Garden as it was before Battery Park was filled in. There were no bridges over the East River then.

Merchants Exchange, Exchange place, destroyed by fire in 1835. Etched on stone.

In Oval—Broadway and Canal street at beginning of nineteenth century, showing old stone bridge and tavern.

At Right—Photograph by Carvalho of Grant's Tomb, taken on the day Gen. Grant's body was interred in 1885. Mr. Crimmins, then president of Park Board, supervised the arrangements.
