

American guns of victory. Five thousand artillerymen assembling on the drill grounds at Camp Hancock for review. The picture is impressive evidence of what the United States is accomplishing in providing the field artillery needed to clear the path for the allied offensive. Copyright, Committee on Public Information.

The Bouche de la Meuse in front of St. Mihiel. The American troops are holding part of the line northwest of Toul in this region. Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

Dogs are helping Italy to hold back the Austro-German drive. They are an important part of the transport. By dog team ammunition and food are hauled over the snow to soldiers in the mountains. This picture was taken on Mount Adamello, scene of recent fighting.

Building America's new merchant marine in a hurry. Hundreds of steel steamships like this are being constructed with a speed not previously deemed possible. Modern efficiency methods are doing it. Copyright, Committee on Public Information.

American women distributing tobacco to French soldiers. The fact that the big baskets were decorated with the Stars and Stripes undoubtedly contributed not a little to the pleased expression on the faces of the poilus who received the smokes. Copyright, Kael & Herbert.