

Here are the two arch enemies of America, William of Germany, and Karl of Austria-Hungary. They met recently at a small railroad station on the Italian front and discussed plans. William has a war map in his hand.
Photo from Central News Service.

Premier Clemenceau of France recently paid a visit to Alsace. He is seen here leaving the old church of Trassevana, one of the towns reconquered by the French.
Copyright Underwood & Underwood.

At Right—A bit of international courtesy. Alpine buglers serenading American marines at their headquarters in a town behind the Lorraine front.
Copyright Committee on Public Information.

This is William L. Hutcheson, head of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, whom President Wilson rebuked for his attitude toward shipping strikes.
Copyright Harris & Ewing. From Paul Thompson.

Paul Thiriat, a French artist, made this splendid drawing showing the Germans sending a smoke cloud against the French. This is distinct from a gas attack for the smoke hides the advancing troops, but it also contains sulphurous fumes and flames. Thiriat was present on this occasion and his sketch is from life.
Copyright Underwood & Underwood.