

"HELL" TO THE MEN OF O'RYAN'S HEROIC DIVISION

As the flag and flower draped caisson, honoring the 1,972 men of the division who gave their lives in France, passed the grand stand, all hats came off from civilian heads, while West Point cadets and soldiers came to the salute. In the stand were many notables of State and city, including, in circle, Gov. Smith and Mayor Hylan. Copyright, International Film Service.

The Engineers got a great ovation as they strode along. Formerly the old 22d, they were made over into the 102d, and their achievements in France were fully up to their traditions. They were commanded by Brig.-Gen. Cornelius Vanderbilt until his promotion to that rank. Copyright, Underwood.

The scene along upper Fifth avenue as the troops, all in full fighting equipment, passed the longest and most enthusiastic grand stand in the world. In the oval is a closeup of Gen. O'Ryan on the prancing steed that carried him in the parade and was presented to him by his admirers especially for this occasion. Copyright, International Film Service.

The kids, and not a few agile grownups, took to the trees, no cop saying them nay, on the morning of jubilee. This particular roost is in Madison Square. Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

One of the interesting and moving sidelights of the parade was the gathering along the line of march of wounded-men of other divisions, all eager to watch and applaud their comrades of the 27th. Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.
