

American troops at Coblenz giving an exhibition drill in the public square for the purpose of impressing upon the populace the efficiency and general military qualities of the Army of Occupation.
Photo by International Film.

Classifying ammunition for shipment to the United States at Mulheim, Germany, once a great German munitions depot. The shells are to be used for decorative purposes over here in parks, libraries and other public places.
Photo by International Film.

The circus is in town again and the small boys are all excited. As always, the clowns are the biggest attraction for the youngsters. Here is the present show's all star aggregation of sawdust comedians. The little fellow at the bottom is Andrew Casino, a famous dwarf performer.

Sir Thomas Lipton is in this country to talk over the possibilities of a race for the America's Cup in 1920. Here he is shown with a group of officers and doughboys returning from France with whom he made himself extremely popular during the voyage over on the Aquitania.
Photo by Edwin Levick.

George Hartzell, a circus clown, and three of the pretty girls who add to the gaiety of the nations at Madison Square Garden.
Photo by Burke & Atwell.