The easiest way to burn stumps entirely, says an exchange, is to bore a number of two-inch auger holes in them to the depth of a foot and fill them with kerosene every day for a week. Then the stump and roots can be demolished by a fire built on top.

This is not only the safest and most thorough method, but it has the very desirable advantage of cheapness, and is just as good whether the stump be green or dry.

We hear a good deal about war now-a-days, and as we look around us and see the turmoil, commotion and unrest of all the nations of earth, we cannot help thinking that this state of things cannot last much longer; that Christ must come and put an end to all this strife and blood shed, and establish his kingdom of peace. An exchange very wisely says: The mother who drives her boy out of the house after supper, telling him to amuse himself until bed time, is likely to see him acquire evil habits and bring disgrace on his parents. Its no wonder, when one stops to think about it, that there are so many boys learning trades in the penitentiary who should have learned them out of it.
