GARFIELD PROBED.

HIS RECORD ON THE TARIFF.

The Republican Candidate Eludes a Reporter Who Approaches Him With a Series of Harmless Interrogatories. Greatly Frightened.

ANOTHER EXPOSURE.

THE LATEST REPUBLICAN OUTRAGE STORY KNOCKED SKY HIGH.

PUN FOR DESERT.

The Kansas City Reporter Who Got Things Mixed.

Garfield's Troublesome Tariff Record.

At a recent meeting of the directors of the National Association of Press, it was decided to dispatch a special agent of the association to General Garfield's residence, near Mentor, for the purpose of making every possible effort to procure a brief and concise statement on the tariff issues from the Republican candidate. Mr. R. T. Paine, Jr., city editor of the Cleveland Press, was chosen to act in this capacity, and visited the Garfield homestead with a prepared list of questions, among which were the following:

"Why, in 1884, did you vote to reduce the duty on railroad iron from eighty to sixty cents per hundred?"

"Will you explain the following extract from a speech delivered by you in 1866, and published in the Congressional Record of the same year? 'I am willing, as a condition, to favor the reduction of railroad iron. I think we should also reduce the proposed duty on salt, and have no doubt in several other particulars we should reduce the rate of duty.'"

"In 1869 you said in answer to a speech delivered by Thaddeus Stevens: 'Against the abstract doctrine of free trade, as such, very little can be said. As a theory it has much to commend it. It can never be applied to values except in time of peace.'"

"During a debate in Congress in 1870 you are credited with saying: 'Nor will it be denied that a large majority of the great thinkers of the day are leading in the direction of what is called free trade, and much can be said in its favor.'"

"In 1873 you voted 'yes' on a bill in which it was proposed, on and after August 1, to make a rebate of ten per cent. of all duties on wool, iron and steel, and every thing of like composition except cotton machinery."

"What have you to say to a pamphlet circulated in Maine, in which it is stated that in 1873 Congressman Lynch introduced a bill, which you supported, instructing the secretary of the treasury to pay a rebate, equal to the duties on iron, which entered into the composition of ships and other buildings?"

"Are you a member of the Cobden free trade club of England?"

"Did you vote in 1870 for a reduction of the duty on pig iron two dollars per ton?"

"Did you vote on several occasions to impose a duty on tea and coffee, and defend such duty as the best way of raising revenue?"

"When Mr. Paine entered the residence of Mr. Garfield he was shown into the parlor, where a dozen or more people were found in waiting. Among these were Major McKinley. On inquiry it was learned that Garfield was closeted with a gentleman in an adjoining room, and subsequently it was found to be Captain Henry who is stationed at Cleveland, and who, since the nomination, has acted as a body guard to the candidate. He is found with him on all occasions, and seems to thoroughly understand the duties he is expected to perform. If Mr. Garfield cannot elude a reporter any other way, Henry is found ready to step in and break the charm and carry off his master's words, and seemingly very important errand. These two gentlemen were in consultation when dinner was announced, and on invitation of Mr. Garfield, all, with the exception of Mr. Paine, adjourned to the dining-room. A few seconds later Mr. Garfield entered the room where Mr. Paine was seated, appearing very much agitated. He talked in a low and excited tone, and walked nervously about the floor, followed closely by Henry. Mr. Paine stepped forward and asked for a few moments private conversation, which the general seemed extremely reluctant to grant. However, he walked to the opposite side of the apartment, and turning to his visitor said, almost gruffly, 'Well, what do you want?'

Mr. Paine then stated the object of his visit in a few words as possible, and as he afterward said, was alarmed to see a severe and angry expression creep into the face of Garfield, who said, in a hurried undertone: 'I shall say nothing. I never say anything to anybody on political questions. What I have to say I say in public.'"

"Do you refuse to give the voters of the country your exact position on these issues?" was the next question, whereat the disturbed candidate said, sharply: 'I refuse to say anything at all.'"

"The Democracy claim you have been inconsistent," began Mr. Paine, but before he could proceed any further, Garfield turned about and with the words: 'Excuse me, good day,' rushed away in hot and ill-mannered haste. The newspaper man waited for an hour or more in the hope of finding the general in better humor, but it availed him nothing. The Republican leader carefully avoided him, and up to the hour of the reporter's leaving, continued in earnest and evidently unpleasant conversation with his man Henry.

Another Exposure.

How One of the Leading Men of the North Takes the Out of a Pretended "Outrage."

Rochester, N. Y., Union and Advertiser.

Among the Southern papers that come to our table is the Times, published at Florence, South Carolina. Its issue of a late date contained a leading editorial, occupying over three columns, in refutation of an alleged outrage said to have been perpetrated upon a Northern man, one W. D. Bell, who claimed to be a traveling agent for Messrs. H. H. Warner & Co., of this city. The man Bell aforesaid wrote a scurrilous letter to the Lewiston (Maine) county, Pa., Gazette, while traveling and doing business at the South, in which he inveighed strongly and at length against Southern law, Southern actions and Southern people. Subsequently on his return North, in an interview with a reporter of the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Telegraph he gave a detailed account of an alleged outrage that had been perpetrated upon him immediately following the publication of this letter. In this interview he stated that he was beset by over one thousand men, driven into a corner, and only saved from lynching by the remarkable bravery which he displayed. The editor of the Florence Times characterizes Bell's letter as a fabrication, states that Bell had denied its authorship when in Florence, and in strong terms denounces Bell as a base calumniator.

Yesterday a representative of the Union was dispatched to interview Mr. Warner and ascertain if he was in possession of the exact facts of the case and if so what those facts are. He found Mr. Warner in his place of business and after obtaining an audience inquired:

Reporter—Can you give me any information in regard to a man by the name of Bell, who reports himself as in your employ, and has been traveling through the South?

Mr. Warner—I have no such man in my employ now. He was dismissed some time since for reasons best known to myself.

R.—What was he doing while in your employ?

Mr. W.—Selling safes and advertising my Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and other remedies.

R.—Do you know anything about an outrage alleged to have been perpetrated upon him in South Carolina?

Mr. W.—Yes, I know about an alleged outrage, but I never have been able to learn of any real one.

R.—You think, then, that any statements in regard to a man Bell may have made regarding any outrage or ill treatment at the South are false?

Mr. W.—First, my investigation of the case. After looking into this matter thoroughly I became convinced that if Mr. Bell had received any rough usage it was his own fault, and because he was in a condition which rendered him unfit to distinguish between hospitable and inhospitable treatment. My investigation convinced me that there was no public demonstration or mob at the time and place he mentions, and that any difficulty which may have occurred was a personal brawl between himself and some other men, the same as is liable to occur in the streets of any city. In fact, I am convinced that the whole reported outrage was gotten up to cover the fact that he was selling his kind and considerate, and such as has convinced me that Southern hospitality is not a mere name but a reality.

R.—How long was Bell in your employ?

Mr. W.—Between 20 and 60 days; wait a moment and I will give you the exact time.

R.—Never mind, that is near enough. Are your men still traveling through the South advertising your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and other remedies?

Mr. W.—More extensively than ever before.

R.—Do they report any ill treatment or animosity towards Northern enterprise?

Mr. W.—On the contrary, my sales were never greater as at the present time. My men never received better treatment, and it is my opinion that the people of the South are as cool headed and reasonable as any other community in any other part of the land.

From the above interview it would seem that the statements made by the man Bell are base fabrications, and on a par with similar stories, which have been and are floating about the country. Mr. Warner is a gentleman whose standing in this community is second to none, and his extensive business specially fits him to speak with authority upon this subject, as his house has a larger force traveling through the South than any other institution in the country. His statements, both with respect to this particular specimen "outrage," and generally, will be accepted as conclusive wherever he is known.

The Ambidextrous Reporter.

Kansas City Times.

There is a reporter at the Times office who writes with equal rapidity with either hand. He is an ambidexter, and a bold, bad one at that. When there is a rush of work at the office, and the devil is shouting "copied" like a fiend incarnate, this useful reporter sits down at his desk in full company front, and with a pencil in each hand slings off local happenings by the yard. He writes on two sheets at once, and don't let his right hand know what his left hand is driving at, but it's driving, all the same. Recently he got a little off his mental base, and attempted to write up a dog fight and a wedding in high life at the same time. He got things mixed. His hands ran clear away with the gray matter in his skull, and things became terribly confused. It is his way his items telescoped each other: At Grace Church last night the nuptials of Mr. Thomas Johnson and Miss Julia Lawrence were celebrated in most magnificent style; a costly floral horseshoe being directed over the altar and when the yellow car saw the flames of anger darting from the eyes of the bride fyste, he opened with the strains of the wedding march. As the handsome couple walked down the aisle the excited crowd near to get frantic, and there was yelping: "Sick 'em Bull," "at him now, Towser," as the spectators became interested in the fight. The bride was elegantly attired in pure white garments of the most costly fabric, and she wore the traditional white veil of the brides of olden times, which by the neck, and his tongue began to loll out and his eyes to turn somersaults as if in the customary black dress suit, white gloves, ears cropped close to his head. He was a disreputable looking dog, in the eyes of the bride, and she was whipped for being so homely. He is of good family, and is engaged in one of the most extensive manufacturing establishments in the West. But the yellow car seemed to be getting the advantage, as he now succeeded in getting the death grip on the throat of the big bride, and when he tenderly kissed the bride, according to the ancient custom, his back was covered with mud, and his off hand leg was terribly chipped up. Among the costly presents received by the happy pair were a fine grand piano from the father of the bride, hair had been scalded from his back, and one eye seemed to have been struck with an anvil. After a short bridal tour the happy couple will settle down to one of the hardest fought battles the reporter ever witnessed, and it was difficult to tell which dog had been punished worst. The fight ended at 4:48 after being bitterly contested at the residence of the bride's parents, and he was taken to his owner's home in a wheelbarrow. He will probably never recover, and if he does will be totally blind, besides being permanently lame in the left hind leg; the beautiful bride received the congratulations of a host of friends. The groom is one of our most promising young men, and his owner dreads the possibility of losing him as he fears that he can never replace him. The father of the bride is one of our wealthiest merchants, and the yellow fyste limped off with a knowing look in his eye and a sneaky curl in his tail, as much as to say, "Who else wants to try me?"

The ambidexter was summarily "fired."
