That Street Committee.

When this year opened we had much to say to the street committee of this city as to the condition of the streets and the imperative need that existed for the use of a better surface stone for macadamizing. The stones that had been put upon the streets at great cost the year before had crumbled under the disintegrating frosts of winter, and laid on the streets, in the spring, a great mass of mud, to be removed at great expense.

We succeeded in stirring the committee up, so that they hired an omnibus one day and drove around the town to see what stones were obtainable. They resolved, or gave out that they had, to try each kind of stone upon the streets and determine which was the best. So far as we know, this was the extent of the committee's virtuous resolution to get better stones than they got from a single quarry; and single quarries still supply the stone, and the breaker that was ordered away from it has never been removed.

And from this committee we are strong in the conclusion that no good work can even be reasonably expected. Its chairman is William Riddle and Parke Cummings is his chief aid. We used to think that they were probably good in both these men; and probably there is if it can be drawn out. Mr. Riddle doubtless has an excellent knowledge of the school books in which he deals and Mr. Cummings of the brass and things that provide his ostensible business. But neither of them have a genius for street management in the interest of the people.

Neither of them know how a good street may be made—judging by their works. Perhaps they do not want to know; or perhaps they may say stubborn fellow-members keep them from doing all the good that they could do and would do if they had their way. Mr. J. P. Stormfeltz is on the committee; he is reported to know how to run a planning mill and he ought to be intelligent enough to know how to make a good roadway. Mr. Joel L. Haines, having graduated from a barber shop through the police force into an auctioneer's stand, may be supposed to have gathered information enough in his pilgrimage to tell stones from mud. Mr. John V. Wise, brick-maker, may have a natural antipathy to stones and fondness for mud, but should not let his prejudices affect his action as a committee man. Mr. Daniel Sing in his devotion to his grocery store probably does not often get on the street; but Mr. H. H. Anderson, dentist and bicyclist, one would think would need to secure ruthless streets with all his energy. Mr. Henry I. Fresh is a tailor and an intelligent member of the committee, and is not the black sheep of the flock. Perhaps we will be able before long to determine what it is that keeps our streets in bad condition and that permits the street railroads to make ruts, lay sidings, occupy bridges and generally take possession of the streets as they please.

We cannot think that the street committee has demonstrated its wisdom as conservator of the city's interest in the streets, in recommending that councils permit the creation of another siding on Duke street north of the bridge. We do not need to prove that the loop made by the street railroad at its passing points, is a great hindrance to the use of the street by ordinary vehicles; and it is an obstruction which a jury would declare to be a nuisance, if it is not absolutely necessary to the running of the railroad. Everyone knows how objectionable these double tracks are, taking up the width of the street, filling it with ruts and forbidding the adjoining property owners to use the streets in front of their houses as a waiting place for their carriages. At the place proposed for the new siding on Duke street, the street railway has fully succeeded in taking possession of one side of the bridge and entirely forbidding its use by wagons; and the street committee seems to have thought that it might as well finish up the job for that square by taking possession of the remainder of it with a side track.

And another thing, in which this remarkable committee has succeeded in demonstrating its wonderful quality, is in the grade it finds in this square of Duke street and the one south of it, which it has just given permission to the property holders to pave with asphalt blocks, it being now about a year since the committee put on its last covering of mud. They have awakened to the fact that their street grade and pavement grade do not agree, though they are both official; and that the street must come down or the pavements go up, to get the streets locked into shape for the asphalt paving.

And the notable body of owls delated all last evening whether they could by their hands hard enough on the street railway company to make it take up its rails, or whether they could make it let them do it at the city's cost; the variegated birds all seeming to agree that the property holders, having laid their sidewalks according to the city gutter, could not be made to change them; and the whole flock is out on Duke street this morning cackling over the situation. When they reach a conclusion, probably they will do something, which will turn out to be nothing, in the usual manner.

The French Elections.

The result of the French election may be materially changed by the numerous re-ballotings but it is quite evident that the bold and firm policy of the government has a strong enough foundation of popular support to enable it to defy the combined forces of its enemies. At the same time the warning has been plainly given that Boulanger still exists as an active factor in French politics—the head that joins in formidable union the Imperialists, Monarchists and others who disapprove of the existing form of government. The result is the most surprising thing in the result is the comparative silence of the speeches with regard to the effect of the clerical antagonism of the government. Undoubtedly the influence of the disfranchised priests was strongly felt against the government, but it does not appear to assume the menacing importance that was thought to belong to it when the pope had evinced his displeasure at the ruling which excluded priests from politics. The position of the church in France appears to be directly the reverse of its position in American politics, as shown in the criticism of Dr. McGlynn for taking part in political affairs. The French government has enforced the decrees forbidding the clergy from taking part in any way in these elections. The clergy resented this and the Comte de Paris, in his recent manifesto, skillfully makes use of this religious lever, urging all friends of the church to support the united enemies of the government. When the smoke of the conflict clears away, it will no doubt be found that the strength of the opposition came chiefly from the clericals, and that in reality the enmity to a republican form of government is slowly but surely wearing itself out. When it has ceased altogether to be dangerous, the revision of the constitution may be safely undertaken, but the French are impatient of anything that is defective and will probably hasten to revision in spite of perils. The strength of those favoring revision in the new chambers will be told in the result of the re-ballotings. A peculiarly French incident was the casting of ballots for Boulanger bearing the words "Martyr of the Republic." The voters who cast these ballots could hardly have expected them to be counted, and evidently intended to put the government in the position of interfering with the right of suffrage. This was also shown by the circulation of the rumor that votes for the exiles would not be counted. Considering the general tendency to sympathize with political exiles, the influence of the clericals and the united action of the opposing parties, the result of the election must be highly satisfactory to all friends of the republic.

A Surprising Result.

Henry S. Ives, the young Napoleon of Wall Street financing methods, who has been on trial for issuing fraudulent stock of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton railway, appears, by the testimony, to be the victim of an attempted conspiracy to charge him with a crime of which he is not at all guilty. Whatever there may have been questionable in his methods of gaining possession of this railroad, there does not seem to have been crime in them; which is very surprising, considering the unanimity and violence with which the newspaper editors have condemned him. He offers another striking illustration, among the many that are lately appearing, that newspaper convictions are often based on poor evidence and are mainly made to gratify a sensational purpose or to run in the vain of a popular cry.

Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Owe to themselves a duty to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, in view of the great relief it has given them, and the suffering and distress it has relieved. It is purifying the blood, regulating the bowels, strengthening the nerves, and toning up the whole system. It restores to health. It is a NEW CURE. I have been for years trying to get help for that terrible general debility and weakness so common to women. Within a year I have taken six or seven bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and the benefit derived from its use has been very great. I am now feeling like a new creature after suffering so many years. Mrs. F. R. Ross, Martin, N. J.

Weak Women.

For nine years I was in a state of constant suffering, scarcely able at any time to walk about the house and rest of the day I was confined to bed. I went to Philadelphia for treatment, which gave me relief for a time, but I was soon worse again. The physician said I had a blood tumor. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and its good effect was soon apparent. I began to improve in health, and continued taking the medicine till now I feel perfectly well and can walk six or seven miles a day without feeling tired. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine for women and anyone who has had blood. JESSIE SMITH, East Broad Top, Pa.

Declared Unconstitutional.

A Judge Holds that the Minnesota Meat Inspection Law is Void. In the United States circuit court at St. Paul on Monday Judge Nelson delivered an able and exhaustive opinion, holding the Minnesota meat inspection law unconstitutional and void. He held that it was in plain violation of the territorial clause of the constitution, which provided that the Congress shall have control of commerce between the states and with the Indian tribes. He also held that it was in violation of the clause of the constitution which provides that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of the citizens of several states. The case was argued at great length last week by W. H. Sanborn for the petitioner, Henry E. Barber, who applied for his discharge under writ of habeas corpus on the ground that this inspection law was void, and by ex-Archbishop Lynch and others for W. Bunn in support of the law. The court granted the petition and discharged Mr. Barber. This decision opens the state of Minnesota through into the sale of dressed beef from Chicago and Kansas City, and practically settles the validity of this law compelling inspection on the hoof, because there is no other way of preventing the sale of the United States that has authority to reverse or overrule this decision, and it becomes the law of the land until it is reversed and an appeal could not be heard in the supreme court for from three to five years, and it is not at all probable that the decision of two able jurists as Judges Hodgson and Nelson would ever be reversed. It in effect kills the Minnesota cat-inspection law.
