Asiatic Items.

An intestinal disease of excessive fatality has made its appearance in Eastern Persia and dispatches from St. Petersburg express fear that it may be the cholera, though in the absence of doctors nothing can be learned. If the epidemic is really cholera it will be very difficult to prevent it from passing over the mountains into the narrow strip of land between Persia and the desert, where the famous trans-Caspian railway has been built by the Russians. It would be easy to check it there by rigid quarantine at the Caspian end of the line and to the east of Bokhara, for it could not spread rapidly over the desert to the northeast. The croakers who always make a great deal of noise over calamities that may be coming, have had so much to say about cholera following the grip that a very little sickness among Asiatics is likely to be magnified by the nervous dread of a terrible epidemic from that direction. The manner of life there is so well suited to the development of epidemics that they are to be expected at any time, and it has been feared that Russian railway building would make their spread to other countries perilously easy. Russia has broken through the barrier of desert that surrounded those lands and it remains to be seen whether she will be able to guard the passage. It will be time to feel some little alarm for Eastern Europe when reliable news comes to the effect that the cholera is really on the railroad line ready for shipment, but even then there will be strong hopes of stopping it. For the present we have quite enough to do in attending to the grip and its deadly followers, and there is neither sense nor profit in worrying about the rumored intestinal troubles of the people of Persian Khorassan.

A more pleasant item from Asia, by way of St. Petersburg, is the announcement that the government has decided to build a railway at once from Lake Balkal to Strotinsk, on the frontier of China. This needs explanation in detail, as that link of the proposed great trans-continental railway would be of little value without western connection, but the story indicates that the time is fast approaching when it may be possible for a Nellie Hly to travel by rail across Europe and Asia from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Bye and bye there will surely be rails to Alaska and a fast line of steamers on Behring's sea, so that people who want to avoid storms and sea sickness can travel to Europe with only a few hours on the water.

What Cambria Shows.

Cambria county, which contains Johnstown and wherein it may be assumed that Adjutant General Hastings has many more friends than Senator Delamater, has nevertheless in its Republican convention nearly unanimously declared for Delamater for governor. This is not a natural result and it is evident that it is the expression not of the Republican people but of the politicians. It is nevertheless significant of the final result in the struggle for the Republican nomination for governor, which is made out by the people but by the politicians; and it is more interesting to know what they have to say than what the Republican voters think. It may be different when the election day comes around. Then the voters will be of some consequence.

It may be safely assumed that Senator Delamater will be the Republican nominee, since it is made clear that he is set up by the Republican machine. All the working politicians, animated by the knowledge that Senator Quay is the source of reward for party services, are tumbling in for Delamater, who is Quay's man. It is doubtful whether General Hastings will have grit enough to keep up the fight in face of the inevitable result; and we expect to see him retire from the field rather than wait to be carried from it with his martial cloak around him.

It would be wise for him perhaps to stay in the fight and to take his wounds, in the knowledge that he will gain popular sympathy in the gant and unequal struggle. It is, moreover, not probable that such politics as force a candidate upon the party by the obvious wires of the party machinery will have enduring vitality, and that there are likely to be early fatalities among the men who move them. The Democratic party would not stand such nonsense a day, and though the Republican voters have shown that they have not easily overturned stomachs, it is likely that they can be given a dose which will be too much for them; and one would think this dose of Delamater would be strong enough to threaten such an effect.

Pigeon Shooting.

Judge Yerkes, in Bucks county, has made a notable construction of the law forbidding cruelty to animals, under which he has caused to be convicted a member of a pigeon shooting club. The judge finds that the infliction of unnecessary pain upon animals is such cruelty as the law forbids; and he thinks that the shooting of pigeons for the purpose of developing skill in the use of the shot gun is unnecessary, and that the wounding of pigeons in the performance is cruelty. We understand that the judge is not clear that the killing of them is cruel, since of the pain they suffered the pigeon is perhaps unconscious; but as all the pigeons are not killed outright, and the wounded survive until they can get the coup de grace from the sportsmen or their attendants, there is suffering caused to the birds and consequently lawless cruelty is practiced. This decision is to be taken to the supreme court, where it is likely to be reformed by the consideration that Judge Yerkes' views would put a summary end to the sports of the chase; which are undertaken for the sake of the sport and not for the sake of food. It may be true that this sport is cruelty to the objects of it, as it certainly causes them suffering, but it is clear enough that the Legislature did not intend to prohibit it, in enacting the law against cruelty to animals, since it has carefully defined the seasons of the year during which the shooting of game may be practiced. The judge's views upon pigeon shooting apply equally as well to deer and quail and rabbit shooting, and the weakness of his law seems to be shown by the clear fact that such sport is lawful.

Practical Interpretation.

A correspondent asks us point out on the article, section and clause of the constitution "warranting the imposition of protective duties; to which we say that no such reference is necessary in view of the fact that the legislature of the country has always imposed such duties; and as their unconstitutionality has not yet been declared by the courts, we deem it safe to assume that it never will be. We are not of those who think it wise to fight windmills, and we are content with the practical solution which has been made of the constitutionality of protective duties by the country's steady use of them.

The new extradition treaty with Great Britain now before the Senate will discourage the formation of colonies of American criminals in Canada. It seems to reach crimes of all kinds and carefully avoids political offenses, and it is stated as a remarkable fact that all of the offenses covered are those of the extradition treaties of both countries with other powers, so that our arrangements have been more imperfect with the country with which we have the most to do. It is generally easier for criminals to go to England or Canada than to any other foreign land, and yet our only arrangement for getting them back is the very imperfect Webster-Ashburton treaty of 1852, which does not reach counterfeiters and rascals of many other varieties. It is held by many that the ease of escape to Canada is a great encouragement to crime, and if there is any truth in this the ratification of the treaty should be at once followed by a decrease in the kinds of crime that have been so encouraged.

LONDONERS claim that they caught the bacillus of influenza a hundred years ago and the Vienna doctors are away behind the age. In 1782 the grip came from the East just as it has done this winter, and Kant, professed to find its origin in an insect imported into Russia in a bale of goods from China. This is a grave delusion to be the modern grip microbes, but the account fails to explain how Kant managed to see it and what kind of an insect he captured. It is a very clumsy yarn, but Kant's real discovery was probably as useful as the Vienna bacillus is likely to prove.

his doctrines to warrant him in attempting to found a sect, which he named the Samaritans. Among the teachings he advocated was the drinking of blood for all diseases. He said that the Bible taught that blood was life. Almost daily pilgrimages were made by those who were willing to the packing houses, and there they drank the blood of the freshly killed beasts. Wilcox was not satisfied, however, with the blood of animals, and he advanced the doctrine that it was well to show belief in the doctrine by giving up human blood for the sick and suffering. He was willing to make the pilgrimage to the packing house. He called upon the faithful members of the band to save his life. A woman named Nancy Dixon was persuaded to allow the preacher to suck blood from her arm. The effect was marvellous, for Wilcox recovered from his alleged illness the same day. This visible manifestation of the truth of his doctrines made a great impression on his followers, and the result has been that from that day on, his habit has steadily increased and is now a regular practice among the Samaritans.

At the home of John Wrinkle, mentioned in the letter, we found two emaciated children. On the beds lay Wrinkle, apparently in the last stages of consumption. When questioned about drinking blood he said that he had been doing so for some time. The children also drank it. The bloodless appearance, however, excited the suspicion of the officer and he compelled the preacher to disrobe. They were covered with scars around the elbows. When confronted with this evidence Wrinkle acknowledged that he had availed himself of the blood of the sick children, and they had willingly given their blood to restore him to health. The man was in such a condition that he could not be removed, but his chains were taken in charge by the officer, and placed in the Children's Home. Chief Speers is anxious to take steps to put a stop to the practice, but there is no law which applies to the case except where children are made use of to supply the blood.

The band of Samaritans is composed of about twenty members, who hold regular weekly meetings at the houses of the different members. At these meetings the sick and suffering are treated, and the children and they are detained to give their blood according to their health and strength. When a member becomes very sick the sick and suffering are treated, and the children and they are detained to give their blood according to their health and strength. WESTERN PRODUCE ABROAD.

It Can Be Bought Cheaper in Liverpool Than in New York. President Louis Mueller, of the Corn and Flour Exchange, Baltimore, in his annual report to the body, comments upon the decrease of the wheat trade, attributed largely to discrimination in shipments against Baltimore. In this connection the report says:

"We must look to the railroads to second our efforts, for with the canal competition and through billing the struggle is a most unequal one. The railroads, however, we cannot but denounce in the strongest terms. As a parasite of the interstate commerce law (a measure which no one will disparage) they cannot quietly should be unhesitatingly eradicated. Under the cover of the monopolistic power of railroads eludes detection, and trade is being carried to the coast, where the products of the country into the hands of foreign consumers by systematically discriminating against its own citizens."
