creating a Board of Admiralty.

Mr. Rice, of Mass., replied that such a board had been condemned in Great Britain as inefficient to provide for the exigencies of war, and by adopting it in this country we would discard all experience at home and abroad, and piace our naval affairs where they were a century ago.

Mr. Rice defended the navy, showing that by embodying the American idea of Discussion of the Louisiana that by embodying the American idea of reform in ship-building and ordnance we had achieved most important results. Extensive Fire in Savannah.

Mr. Davis spoke in support of the prop-sition for a Board of Admiralty, to be headed by Admiral Farragut, and thought if the Board had been created early in the war we should not have had repeated fail-ires. He condemned double-enders, and ooked upon monitors as failures. Mr. Rice, in reply, supported the Navy Department, and gave a summary of ope-rations since the outbreak of the rebellion.

FROM RICHMOND PAPERS. The Enquerier, in an article on peace,

We should try and possess our souls with equanimity until the worthy gents who have gone to Washington return to Richmond. We are not of those who believe uire into the business matters of any that peace talk and peace missions tend embers of Congress, &c, which was to demoralize the army. We do not believe that the gallant soldiers who have braved the storms of battle for four years are likely to be demoralized by peace talk, but on the centrary think they do much good, for our people to understand in an authoritative manner from men like Vice-President Stephens, Seaster Hunter and Judge Campbell the exact degree of degradation to which the enemy would reduce us by reconstruction. We believe the so called mission from these gentlemen will teach our people that the terms of the enemy are nothing less than unconditional surrender. We had better go down fighting, better be subjugated and conquered, than live to recollect that we brought ruin on our own heads by the deception of reconstruction. These missions should encourage our people to renewed effort and
