

Should Criminal Corporations be Punished?

BY LEO.
That is the question at issue between the present Administration and the guilty parties. President Roosevelt, in his Provincetown speech, and Secretary Taft, in his Columbus speech, answer in the affirmative. They are in perfect accord. But there are many who seem to think that the Administration ought to wink at the crime of great corporations for fear of evil consequences of their prosecution. It hurts business, they aver, to molest rich corporations doing business on a large scale. An effort is made to persuade the President to let up on these wrong-doers in the interest of business prosperity. The answer of the President is simply this, "I shall continue to enforce the law, be the consequences what they may. For the remainder of my term in office the rich criminals must obey the law of the land or suffer the consequences." That we call a grand stand. The country glories in the President's spunk. Let him persevere.

It seems a good thing just now that Roosevelt announced three years ago that he would not accept the nomination in 1908. Had he not done it, evil-minded persons would say that the President was playing the role of demagogue. As it is, there is no excuse for such an accusation. The man is trying to do his sworn duty as the chief magistrate of a great nation, as every fair-minded man can see.

Why should he let wealthy criminals go unpunished? It certainly is not just. It is surely not expedient. If the rich are allowed to violate the law with impunity the example will tell injuriously on all the poorer classes. The poor will want to ape the rich, and lying and plundering will become general, to the ruin of morals and the ultimate downfall of the republic.

The historian knows how things were in France for several years before the French revolution. The wealthy classes had shifted the burdens of government upon the shoulders of the poor. The moneyed men did just about what they pleased. At last the nation asserted its rights, and in an excessive spasm of patriotism swept throne and nobility out of existence. We do not look for things of that sort to occur here very soon, nor at all; but still allowing the rich criminal to have his way unchecked is preparing the way for disaster on a large scale.

President Roosevelt is not a radical because of his effort to enforce the law of the land. He is a true conservative. He is trying to prevent criminal transactions by wealthy corporations. What were the laws made for? Did not Congress expect the executive to administer impartially? Why should John D. Rockefeller be allowed to violate law with impunity any more than any other citizen of the republic? He had been transgressing for years, finally was caught and a huge fine was assessed the great corporation of which he is president. And lo! he growls as if he had a right to rebate and thus wrong other business men.

Honest corporations have nothing to fear. There is no disposition to molest any man, or any combination of men, doing an honest business. The Administration draws a clear distinction between the honest and the criminal corporations, the latter it will punish if caught. And is not that wholesome for the national well being? We think so.

The days are growing perceptibly shorter, and indications of approaching fall are at hand. Considerable of the tobacco crop has been cut and shedded.

The Great Darke County Fair for 1907 is now numbered among the things of the past, and everybody's curiosity has been gratified in having a view of our best products as shown by the exhibits, and I presume no one was disappointed in seeing less than was anticipated.

This week we have our State Fair at Columbus and it will not, I think, fail in patrons from this part of the state. Of course, many people will want to see whether the state can make a better showing than our county. Home pride does very much in determining ideas and ambitions in people. By all means, let there be a generous attendance of our people at the State Fair to ascertain whether in reality it eclipsed our local fair. Of course, our people will be unbiased judges!

Dr. and Mrs. C. C. Vankirk, late residents of this place, stationed at Ft. Apache, Ariz., for the last three years, spent several days here last week, visiting among friends. They left here for White Earth, Minn., the place to which assigned for duty as surgeon at that post.

Last week was a tiresome one for most people—attending the Fair, so they tried to rest up on Sunday.

The county fair is a thing of the past for another year. It is a great place to go to, as the big crowds prove. They go to meet old friends, whom they seldom get to see at any other place, and on account of the attractions.

Perry Bailey and wife of Paulding county were down to the Fair, and also visited Peter Unger and family a short time.

Frank Trick and wife of Logansport attended the Fair and visited his parents, J. C. Trick and wife, over Sunday.

W. D. Unger and wife, C. E. Unger, wife and son Hermon, visited W. G. Ludy and family Sunday.

Ohio's Big Day at the Jamestown Exposition

HISTORIC NEIGHBOR OF OLD VIRGINIA TO CELEBRATE AT TERCENTENNIAL SEPT. 11.

Receptions, Military Reviews and Parades, Addresses by Governors of Ohio and Virginia and Other Features—Remarkable Historical Exhibit of Buckeye State, Including Interesting Remains of the Mound Builders—Display of the Schools.

THE special committee consisting of Colonel John P. Given, Clive C. Handy and Stuart H. Bollin, appointed by the Ohio Tercentennial commission, has arranged the following programme for Ohio day, Sept. 11, at the Jamestown exposition, Hon. Braxton W. Campbell, president of the Ohio commission, presiding.
Address of welcome, James M. Barr, director general of the Jamestown exposition.
Address, Governor Claude A. Swanson of Virginia.
Address, Governor Andrew L. Harris of Ohio.
Address, Hon. Judson Harmon, attorney general of the United States during President Cleveland's second administration.
Original ode, Miss Anne Paul Worthington, who is a lineal descendant of the owner of Adena, the house of which the Ohio state building at the Jamestown exposition is a reproduction.
Music, "Star Spangled Banner."
In the afternoon at 1:30 o'clock there will be a luncheon to the governor of Ohio and official party by the exposition company.
At 5 p. m. there will be a parade of all troops on the grounds to be reviewed by the governor of Ohio, the governor of Virginia, Major General F. D. Grant, Admiral F. P. Harrington and other distinguished persons.
From 8 to 11 p. m. there will be a reception at the Ohio state building by the Ohio commission in honor of Governor and Mrs. Andrew L. Harris of Ohio. Admission by card only.
Open house will be held at the Ohio building from 1 to 5 p. m. Sept. 11, and the general public is invited to call. The Second Ohio Infantry from northwest-placed, notably among the latter being the collection from the Cleveland Art school.

Ohio Historical Exhibit.

One of the most interesting features in the History building at the Jamestown exposition is the exhibit installed by the Ohio State Archaeological and Historical society, which represents the Buckeye State in this branch of its participation at the Tercentennial.
The exhibit, which is of an entirely archaeological nature, is rich and complete in relics and specimens of the mounds, forts, graves and monuments of prehistoric periods. The display is located in one of the most prominent positions in the History building and is arranged in glass cases, all carefully and comprehensively labeled. A prehistoric neckless, valued at $2000, is but one of a most interesting collection included in the Ohio exhibit.
A brief sketch of the history of this society, which has done so much for the scientific world along the lines of archaeological research, may not be out of order at this time. The society was founded by General Brinkerhoff at Mansfield, O., in 1875 and the next year received an appropriation from the state to make an exhibit at the Centennial exposition at Philadelphia. For several years the organization flourished, but at the death of John T. Short, its secretary, in 1883 the society became practically inoperative and re-

Ohio, Colonel Bryant commanding, and the battalion of engineers from Cleveland, O., Major McQuigg commanding, will be in camp on the exposition grounds at that date.

Ohio's Magnificent Exhibit.

With an appropriation of $75,000 Ohio has installed at the Jamestown exposition a most complete and magnificent exhibit, including a beautiful state building, exhibits of education, history, agriculture and mining, that illustrates the wonderful resources of the Buckeye State.

The Ohio state building, which is located on the immediate water front of the exposition grounds, affording a magnificent view of historic Hampton Roads and the waters of Chesapeake bay, is a replica of "Adena," the first stone house built west of the Allegheny mountains. With broad verandas and extensive lawn, Ohio has one of the most attractive state buildings at the exposition. The interior of the building is exquisitely finished and furnished, with an eye to artistic beauty and comfort. In one of the rooms have been hung the portraits of the members of the state commission to the exposition, who are as follows: Braxton W. Campbell of Cincinnati, president of the commission; Clive C. Handy of Wauson, Ernest R. Root of Medina, George W. Knight, secretary of the commission, of Columbus; John P. Given of Circleville and Stuart H. Bollin, executive commissioner. Miss Blanche Cadot of Toledo is the hostess for the state of Ohio, appointed by the commission.
The Ohio State university, under the supervision of Professor Freuch, has installed an educational exhibit of great interest in the Educational building at the Tercentennial.
The Ohio public school exhibit is also attracting much attention at the exposition and is classed as one of the finest public school exhibits ever arranged.
A reproduction in miniature of the first school in Ohio taught by President Garfield is the feature of the exhibit. The work of the various public schools of the cities throughout the state is arranged in glass cases around the room, while on the walls above the art work of the students has been murmer so until it was revived two years later by Governor Hood.

For twenty-four years the society has faithfully pursued the lines of study and investigation for which it was organized and has held regular annual meetings at Columbus. In that time it has accumulated a valuable collection of relics and antiques, consisting of over 100,000 specimens.
No state in the Union is so rich in archaeological resources as Ohio, and the society has in its possession mounds, forts, graves and monuments, all belonging to prehistoric periods. Among the most interesting of these is Fort Ancient, in Warren county, the largest, best preserved and most interesting remains of its character now extant. Models of this fort are in some of the leading museums of Europe, and it is often visited by distinguished scholars of foreign countries.
The society is also the possessor of the famous Serpent mound in the northern part of Adams county, one of the most curious religious monuments left by the mound builders. An exact reproduction in miniature of this wonderful handwork of the ancient mound builders forms a most interesting part of the Ohio exhibit. The miniature is exact in every detail and shows the entire reservation of seventy acres on which the mound is located. Another miniature, representing one of the burial mounds, or cremation houses, forms a feature of the exhibit of the society. So well preserved is this burial place in every detail that many of the methods of these people of a totally unknown period are shown. The mound, which is 100 feet in length, 60 feet in breadth and 20 feet in height, was in such a perfect state of preservation when uncovered that the actual graves and skeletons, all charred from cremation, were revealed.
William C. Mills, curator and librarian of the Ohio State Archaeological and Historical society, who has made a life study of this branch of science, is in charge of the exhibit at the Jamestown Tercentennial. His earnest and untiring work as a member of the organization has been well rewarded, and his publications on various phases of archaeological research are most interesting and valuable.
