Fairs—1915.

Railroads have advised the Agricultural Commission that they will not grant free return shipment of exhibits at county and state fairs in 1915. For many years this favor has been granted to exhibitors. No reason is given by the railroads for such action. Many owners of pure bred live stock will decline to show animals for premiums this year on account of fear of the foot and mouth disease. This may cause fair boards to cancel exhibits in cattle, sheep, and hogs. Other departments of the fairs can be filled and the fairs be held as usual.

Practically all county fairs will encourage the Junior Contest work, viz.: acre of corn, live stock judging, apple growing, potato growing, pig growing, domestic science, and educational work.

The boy who grows most corn on one acre, in each county, will get a free scholarship, good for the three year short course in the College of Agriculture at Columbus. Cash value of same $60.

HOW THE SUGAR GOES.

Pathetic Wail of a New York Restaurant Proprietor. "I love my patrons," said a well known restaurant proprietor, "but friendship and platonic affection cease when they begin to take all the sugar I have. The other day I took an inventory of the stock of this establishment and I found that my patrons were using fifteen and eighteen lumps of sugar to every cup of coffee or tea that was consumed. I knew that could not be true, and I put a watch on my help, thinking that some one was stealing the sugar. I saw none of my help go near the barrel, while the sugar continued to go at the same rate.

"So I watched my customers. Many of them never used sugar in their coffee or tea before this war, and now they dig into the bowl and take out a large handful of the lumps. Do you think they put any of it into their coffee or tea? No; they put the lumps into their pockets and take them home. "The war and the high cost of living are responsible. People taking their lunches downtown feel that they cannot afford to buy sugar for the family, so they let the restaurant man furnish it. What am I going to do? If I catch them and tell them to put it back they do not come here for their lunches any more, and if I let them keep on taking it I will be broke soon."—New York Telegraph.

Good Work of Boy Scouts. For some time a group of scouts in Sayville, N. Y., have been doing their good turns so unostentatiously that no one knew anything about them. They have been taking care of a crippled man who was unable to provide himself with wood and food for the winter. Every day they have chopped his wood and prepared his meals, taking turns in doing anything that was in their power for this man whom they have "adopted."—New York Press.

Storyland. Alone in the shade that the oak tree has made Where the leafy boughs sway as they will, Sits Nan in her nook and, deep in a book, Never knows when it blows or is still. Away into Fairyland now she is going; Clear skies arch above her and fair winds are blowing.

There Snow White she meets and Prince Charming she greets; Sees a knight ride away through the wood; To Puss in Boots talks and whispers and walks With dear Beauty, so gentle and good. Far, far in the forest the Sapphire Bird's singing, And high in the heavens the Wild Swans are winging. To her wondering eyes, fair dream castles rise, While the leafy boughs sway as they will, But Nan, far away, in her dreamland gay Never knows when it blows or is still. Oh, who for the wind or the rain could be caring, When off into Storyland she may go faring? —Youth's Companion.

SNAPSHOTS AT NOTABLE PERSONS

Sir David Henderson, Britain's Chief Aviator.

The efficiency of the aviation corps which accompanied the British expeditionary army to France has given England another national hero whose work has twice won him mention in Sir John French's dispatches, to say nothing of the praise officially given him by the French commander in chief, General Joffre.

The commander of the aviation corps and the man who is responsible for its organization and its proved efficiency is Colonel Sir David Henderson of the Royal Flying corps.

Sir David is a soldier of twenty years' experience and served conspicuously in the South African war. Of course, that was before any one ever thought of an army flying corps. But a few years later the possibilities of the aeroplane were demonstrated, and Sir David Henderson was one of the first men in the British army to look ahead a few years and see the wonderful uses to which the flying machine would be put in warfare.

Prior to the advent of the flying machine he had been a student of the art of reconnaissance, and to him the British war office turned when the possibilities of the flying machine were first beginning to be realized. The first thing he did was to qualify himself as an air pilot, which did not take him long. He had not been studying the possibilities of the flying machine in warfare long until he decided that it was revolutionizing the art of scouting.

Then he set to work to organize the Royal Flying corps, which has been giving such a good account of itself in the fighting in France.

Quartermaster of German Army. When an army takes the field it needs much more than bullets, bayonets and cannon to perform its work.

To provide for the wants of the troops every army has one or more administrative departments charged with the procurement, custody and distribution of essential supplies. The work of the administrative departments is divided into three spheres of action, as follows:

First.—The service performed in the rear of the enemy, or in the national territory of the governments.

Second.—The service of the line of communications. Provision must be made for the replacement of the stores consumed by the army and the transportation, subsistence and quartering of all the troops, prisoners and the sick and wounded.

Third.—The supply of troops in the field during active operations. General von Stein, quartermaster general of the German army, has the immense task not only of supplying equipment, but he also directs the workings of the commissary department. That General von Stein is in charge of both departments is sufficient evidence of his fitness for the task. He is a veteran soldier and has had many years' experience in the line of duty in which he is now engaged.
