On last Thursday evening by some means the barn of A. M. Cromer on his farm adjoining our village on the south caught fire and was entirely consumed. This was a large barn lately built on modern plans and inflicts a heavy loss. It was partially insured, but to what extent I am unable to say. The live stock and machinery were all saved, but the grain stored in it was burned up. Origin of the fire is unknown. Some, however, think spontaneous combustion due to the excessive heat was the cause of the fire. One thing seems sure, it took a very short time to burn up or pass the danger line to other buildings, which luckily escaped favored by a still wind and a slate roof. The barn was wired for electric lights and some think the fire may have originated from that source, but the origin of the fire in the upper part of the barn militates against that theory as the lights were all in the lower part of the barn. It will probably never be known how the fire started. We all know that a very valuable barn was burned and one that cost nearly $5,000 to build. The community sympathizes with Mr. Cromer in his loss.

The passing of tomorrow will change the employment of a large number of our office-aspiring fellow-citizens.

Dr. H. V. Brown Dead.

Dr. H. V. Brown died Friday afternoon at four o'clock at his late home on West Arch street, following an illness of paralysis. Five years ago the late physician suffered a stroke of paralysis and two years later was again stricken. He recovered sufficiently to be about the streets and two weeks ago his condition became much worse, the aged man sustaining four strokes in the past week.

Hezekiah V. Brown was a son of Julius and Elizabeth Brown, and was born in Darke county, Ohio, July 11, 1840, celebrating his seventysixth birthday this month. He enlisted in Company H, 94th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in August, 1862, at Piqua, Ohio. He later served in the 45th and also in the 110th Ohio Infantry.

Dr. Brown took part in the battles of Buzzard's Roost, Ga., Resaca, Adairsville, Dallas, New Hope Church, Peachtree Creek, Savannah, Jonesborough, Atlanta and Missionary Ridge.

On February 5, 1867, he was married to Miss Mollie Pitsenberger and they moved to Jay county in 1871. He took up the study of medicine and graduated from the Starling Medical College of Columbus in 1882, and was actively engaged in the practice as a physician in this city until fourteen years ago when he retired. He is survived by the widow, but no children. One brother, William Brown, resides in Versailles, Ohio, and a sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Fulch, in Terre Haute.

Funeral services will be held Sunday afternoon at four o'clock from the late residence, in charge of the Methodist pastor, Rev. A. S. Preston, and assisted by Rev. J. H. Nall of the United Brethren church. Interment will be made in Green Park cemetery.—Daily Sun, Portland, Ind., July 29, 1916.

Dr. Brown was well known in this city and county and for a number of years contributed to the columns of the Journal over the signature of "Darke County Boy."—Editor.

Junior Fashions.

There are few better places to study children's clothes than at a resort frequented by modish people. At such places one sees little that is freakish or fussy in junior attire. Practicality is in fact the prime requisite in this department of dress, for children have little thought to their clothes and the constant changes necessitate many visits to the laundress. Then children grow so fast, that clever mothers study the problem of buying the smallest possible outfit that will keep the child fresh and presentable, since the next younger member is apt to resent hand downs that are seldom in perfect condition when she gets them.

Wash Fabrics

are worn the year round by children of the well-to-do, and school frocks of the winter differ little from summer outfits and need almost as frequent washing. Gingham of good quality that hold their shape and color with the heavier grades of tailored cottons make ideal dresses of this sort. Simplicity of cut, very little trimming and great nicety of detail marks the attire of these children who can have everything of the best, and usually the cost is far from low for such dainty simplicity, but with a few good patterns and careful stitching duplicates are easily made at home for a fraction of the cost.

Sweaters and Long Coats.

Sweaters, and later, long all-covering coats, make the light weight washable frock as practical in nipping winds as in warmly heated places. And the children are particularly attractive in the brilliant hued garments donned by all ages here this year, when the other half of the world wears only the colors of grief. The coat of velours cord and plaided or striped wool fabric that slips over the summer frock when cool winds blow, is all right for early autumn wear, but later this coat needs the warmest of linings, plenty of pockets and some of the many forms of the convertible collars, that are a predominant feature of adult wraps. Pile fabrics of all sorts are to be greatly worn next season, both for whole garments and as trimming. Many of the furs are prettily reproduced in these fabrics, and they offer great opportunity for lengthening a too short garment, while matching cuffs and collars make the rebuilt garment fresh and up-to-date.

Combinations

of material continue to be modish, so that it is an easy matter to prolong the life of an outgrown dress, by adding a little new material which may either match or contrast in color and weave. Mohair is once more endorsed and there are a number of fabrics woven either wholly or partly of this wool, that make pretty and exceptionally practical dresses for the youngsters, since they shed dust and grime, and yet are easily cleaned when necessary. The striped and plain combination suits and dresses of the summer come in very similar styles for fall, and coats are rather smarter in contrast than when matching the dress or skirt.

Wash Crepes.

Especially pretty and practical for the very little girl are frocks of white crepe weaves, in soft dainty cotton that washes readily and needs no ironing. A pretty style in one-piece cut, buttons continuously from the top of the shoulder to the end of the sleeve, and is trimmed with one of the feather-stitched bands that closely resemble hand work. Half a dozen of these slips can be made in less time than one elaborate frock would take, and the child looks better dressed in their simple freshness than in a garment at many times the cost. All white is usually a most satisfactory choice for the little girl's dress. Colored sweaters and hats offer all the needed relief.

More Room for Autos.

That more room has been needed for autos at the Great Darke County Fair has been appreciated by the Fair Board, is evidenced by its recent action. A portion of the southeast corner of the grounds heretofore occupied by hitching racks has been arranged for parking autos, and machines coming in the Eaton, Arcanum and Fort Jefferson pikes will be admitted at the south gates. Arrangements are being made for bigger crowds and a better Fair than ever before. Plan to come to Greenville during the week of August 21-25. 5w1

Astronomical Data for August.

Venus may be seen in the morning sky. At the middle of the month it rises about three hours before the sun and attains maximum brilliancy on August 9. Venus far outshines any other star-like object, and so may be identified without difficulty. Mars may be seen in the evening sky during the month, but will be an inconspicuous object in the southwest not far from Spica, the brightest star in Virgo. At the middle of the month Jupiter will rise a little before 10 o'clock in the evening (local time). There is no very bright star in its immediate vicinity, and its brightness enables one to identify it without difficulty.

Saturn will be too near the sun for easy observation the first of the month; but toward the last of the month it may be seen in the morning sky, when it will rise about three hours before the sun. It will be not far from Castor and Pollux and almost directly south from Pollux.

Toward the last of the month, when the moon gets out of the way, the Milky Way will be conspicuous in the evening. At about 10 o'clock it will stretch across the sky from northeast to southwest, passing pretty nearly through the zenith. It cannot be seen to advantage unless one goes where the sky is free from smoke and the glare of artificial lights. The telescope confirms what had been surmised long before its invention: that the Milky Way is made up of a large number of stars too faint to be seen as individual stars by the naked eye. It is safe to say that our universe of stars has its greatest extension in the direction of the Milky Way, but the question of the structure and distance of the Milky Way is a difficult one to investigate. It has been estimated, although the figures are not entitled to any high degree of confidence, that its nearer portions are so distant that it takes light over 15,000 years to pass from these regions to the earth; and since there is reason to suppose that the Milky Way has a considerable depth, its more remote portions are probably far more distant still.—Ohio State University News.

Hughes Points the Way

The speech of the Republican candidate for president was a keynote speech indeed. Not one person in the great audience at the Carnegie hall meeting was in doubt for one moment as to just what he meant by everything he said.

His address was comprehensive, logical, clear and all sufficient for the occasion. There can be no dispute as to this. Plainly Mr. Hughes is a man who "knows what he wants when he wants it," and it is the opinion of political authorities who heard him and who have since read his remarks that he knows also how to get it.

It was incumbent upon the Republican candidate to confine the scope of his remarks to the limitations of the occasion, but his crushing analysis of the shortcomings of the present administration of the government is merely an earnest of what the tone and the contents of his speeches will be when he gets on the stump.

At Carnegie hall Mr. Hughes adverted to every general question that is apt to be a serious issue in the campaign and in language that will be absolutely clear to every man or woman able to read he stated his opinions, his convictions and his purposes. On the stump he will argue those points in detail. As an orator he is eloquent, his personality attractive, and his marshaling of facts so cohesive that he holds his audience to the end. He makes it easy for them to follow him, and his points are not lost.

There was nothing equivocal, nothing apologetic in the Republican candidate's speech of acceptance. He called a spade a spade, and the unanimous opinion of those who heard him was that he shot to the center and rang the bell. The Republican campaign is now open, and those who will speak and write and work for the success of the Republican ticket can wish for no more adequate campaign document, no more satisfactory statement of issues than are found in the candidate's salutatory.

THE FLAG AND THE MAN.

DUTY OF THE ADMINISTRATION TO STOP PLOTS AND CONSPIRACIES.

We denounce all plots and conspiracies in the interest of any foreign nation. Utterly intolerable is the use of our soil for alien intrigues. Every American must unreservedly condemn them and support every effort for their suppression. But here also prompt, vigorous and adequate measures on the part of the administration were needed. There should have been no hesitation, no notion that it was wise and politic to delay. Such an abuse of our territory demanded immediate and thoroughgoing action. As soon as the administration had notice of plots and conspiracies it was its duty to stop them. It was not lacking in resources. Its responsibility for their continuance cannot be escaped by the condemnation of others.—From Mr. Hughes' Speech of Acceptance.

PROMISE TO REDUCE THE COST OF LIVING NOT KEPT.

Our opponents promised to reduce the cost of living. This they have failed to do. But they did reduce the opportunities of making a living. Let us not forget the conditions that existed in this country under the new tariff prior to the outbreak of the war. Production had decreased, business was languishing, new enterprises were not undertaken. Instead of expansion there was curtailment and our streets were filled with the unemployed. What ground is there for expecting better conditions when the unhealthy stimulus of the war has spent its force and our industries and workmen are exposed to the competition of an energized Europe? It is plain that we must have protective upbuilding policies.—Mr. Hughes' Speech of Acceptance.

WHAT ONE BIG MAN THINKS OF ANOTHER.

President W. H. P. Faunce of Brown university is a pretty live wire who keeps abreast of the times, has been proved of observation and knows a good man when he sees him. Here is what he has to say about the Republican candidate for the presidency:

"I have known Justice Hughes intimately since we were students together at Brown and have seen him a thousand times at work and at play. No man of our generation has a finer combination of character and intellect. Absolutely fearless, unselfish, loyal to American ideals, he is worthy of a nation's trust.

"All his friends know that behind the dignity of bearing is a rich fund of humor and good fellowship. Whether he is climbing a mountain, reading novels, playing with his children, resisting a political lobby or delivering the opinion of the supreme court, he is ever the same rugged, democratic, fair minded American. His varied experience has given him wide horizon and sympathy with every aspect of American life.

"He possesses two qualities rarely found together—the judicial temper and the capacity for swift and resolute action. Under his administration the fog which now besets many public questions would be cleared away.

"His penetrating mind goes to the heart of any subject he selects and strips off the irrelevant at once. Such a mind is peculiarly needed amid the intricate problems that now confront America.

"We need more than good intentions. We need clear vision, sound judgment, strong will, unhesitating decision. In short, we need Charles E. Hughes."
