WORKMEN TO BE STARVED INTO SUBMISSION.

Chicago, July 14.—The end of the Pullman strike is in sight. Driven by hunger to accept the reduced wages against which they rebelled two months ago, employes of the big car works are on the point of surrendering. Hundreds of families have been expecting the constable for days. Eviction from the company's houses is sure to come soon unless the strikers go to work. Scores of them are too poor to move. Many families have used up every dollar of their earnings and it is now work or beg with them. There has never been a doubt in the minds of officials that when this point was reached the strike would be over and the shops will soon be opened.—K. C. Star.

Gold Four Dollars A Ton.

Though it is a fact that the United States can never liquidate (in gold) its bonded indebtedness to British bond holders — to say nothing of paying the interest on these obligations, which now troubles the secretary of the treasury while gold remains scarce as at present—we have discovered the process by which the government may purchase the stuff at about six dollars per ton, and settle up with the world on the basis of its present valuation. This is the age of discovery and invention, and apprehending the fact that the fools in congress—through thirty years of congressional jugglery—have placed the United States where the repudiation of the public debt is the only possible means of our recovery from bondage, we have concluded to suggest to the government the honorable way out. It would be dishonorable for so honorable a body of rogues as comprises the law-making aggregation at Washington to even hint at repudiation; it would not be violating our pledge, however, to settle the government's bonded indebtedness with gold, compelling the bond-holders to receive it at the rate which the bond-holders themselves contracted. We will sell, under certain provisions, enough gold, at the rate of six dollars per ton, to the United States to pay its obligations. Its production is not much of a secret, though just at present we do not intend to cause too much flurry in Lombard and Wall streets by making the knowledge of its creation too conspicuous.

There is no aluminum in clay, but there is a metallic combination, alchemical in principle, through which the alum in clay is converted to the cheap metallic substance called aluminum. The same principle applied to the earth where gold is found, modified by a peculiar formation of the galvanic battery, will transform the earth to a better quality of gold than is now taken out of the mines. With the proper facilities, and on a large scale, the gold can be easily produced for three or four dollars per ton. We hope soon to give our attention to the formation of a company for the manufacture, on a large scale, of the metallic bullion so highly prized by the bond-holders, and give them plenty of it. The same principle applies also to silver. We have also discovered a method of combining metallic substances, by which iron and steel may cheaply be made indestructible through oxidation, thus precluding the necessity of paint. Gold pavement for streets will be the cheapest and most durable thing possible for a material Jerusalem, under these circumstances.—The Flaming Sword, Chicago Ill
