One That Enlarges the Eye of a House-Fly to an Area of 312 Square Feet.

All who use the microscope are aware that the limit of its magnifying powers is soon reached. Beyond a certain point the image becomes indistinct, large but not clear, and the imperfections of the instrument are magnified as well as the object. Prof. Dolbear has observed that "the powers of the microscope have not been doubled within the last 50 years, though more time and ingenuity have been given to the problem of improving it than will ever be given in the same interval again." It is dangerous, however, to prophesy, says the London Telegraph. One of the exhibits at the Royal society's conversation seemed to mark a very distinct advance. Mr. J. W. Gordon showed a high-power microscope which had in the view-field of the ordinary instrument a rotating glass screen, and this, viewed through a second microscope, gave a further magnification of 100 diameters. The ground-glass screen, by expending the transmitted light wave, causes it completely to fill the aperture of the second microscope, so that the usual imperfections of excessive magnification disappear. A diatom was magnified 10,000 diameters, and its structure was clear and well defined. With the same magnification the eye of a house-fly would seem to cover an area of 312 square feet.

THE POWER OF MIMICRY.

As Presented in Public Oftentimes It Amounts Merely to a Species of Boring.

The power of mimicry deserts the average man at the same time, and for the same reason, as the power of parody, says the London Saturday Review. Before he is 20 the average youth can catch, more or less recognizably, the tone of voice and the tone of mind of his friends. Later his own mind acquires so distinct a tone, and he becomes so accustomed to his own voice, that his efforts at mimicry (if he make any) are dire failures. Occasionally, however, a man retains the knack even in his prime and even though he has a distinct individuality. In him, and in him alone, we behold the complete mimic. The mimicry is a form of criticism, and a distinct individuality—a point of view—is as useful in the mimic as in the critic. Mimicry is a mechanical reproduction of voice and gesture and facial play is a mere waste of time and trial of patience. Yet that is the kind of mimicry that is nearly always offered us. A man comes upon the platform and reproduces verbatim some scene of a recent play exactly as it was enacted by this or that mimic. If he were a parrot the effect would be amusing, for it is odd to hear a bird uttering human inflections. But he happens to be a man, and so we are merely bored.

The Old Saying, "Tis Never too Late to Improve"

Applies with much force to the grocery business, so we are putting that theory into practice in a manner and with an energy never equaled in our line in Great Bend. It is our intention to render to those good people who are encouraging us, such a reliable, efficient and saving service as can only be prompted by grateful hearts and a firm purpose to reciprocate. In every particular we shall improve upon the old methods.

Time was when the greasy grocer on "loafers'" corner seemed to have for his motto:

"Any Old Thing Will Do"
We like ours better
"The Best is None too Good."

Not only have we placed within our cheerful room a stock of the cleanest, choicest brands of all the staples, but our Chicago house wisely selects the freshest and most tempting delicacies that money will procure in that great market. Fast freights and refrigerator cars bring them to our door; and then through our own inspection, with pleasure and dispatch, to your table, so daintily and tastefully filled with selections from our grocery department, we hope.

Our Prices Shall be the Lowest Possible

Our service the quickest; eatables, store and methods the cleanest.

Thanking you in advance for every mark of your approval, we most respectfully submit the case.
